Montreal Gazette:—Those signatures to the historical document which binds together in bonds of unity two sister nations record a linguistic triumph. The Gaelic form of the Irish signatures is to some eyes as threatening to larynx, jaw and vocal cords as those Gallic monstrosities beginning with Fx, with which the war made us familiar. How much softer and easier of utterance is Griffith than the Gaelic Ghrítha. Think, too, of the stupendous effort required to pronounce the fearsome combination of consonants in Dhubhrigh, while the simple English form Duffy presents no difficulties.
