LONDON'S WATER SUPPLY.

RICHMOND, Mo., May 22—Poleless wireless is the latest. D. C. Elliott, professor of science in the Richmond High School, in the basement of the school yesterday heard a strange clicking. Investigating, he traced the noise to a wireless telegraph instrument which he had made to instruct his pupils. The machine was stored in the basement while not in use.

Professor Elliott sent for a telegrapher, who, by means of the basement apparatus, succeeded in reading mesages going from wireless stations at Santa Crub, Cal., and Oklahoma City, London's consumption of water for a year is 82,125,249,347 gallons. This is only one of the many gigantle figures of London's water supply contained in the annual report of the Metropolitan Water Board for the year ending March 31, 1907. Santa Crub, Cal., and Oklahoma City, Okla. He also responded to the queries neade by the wireless operators when they found the new station on the line.

Figures concerning the students matriculated at Cornell in the last twenty years indicate that 42 per cent. have come from private schools and 58 per cent. from public schools. Of private school pupils 158 were dropped after the first term and 111 from public schools, and the percentage of fallures among the public school graduates is much lower than those of private schools. Consequently the Cornell faculty favors withdrawing the privates of admission by certificate from private schools.

They also do not wear corsets, and they have no rips to speak of When standing upstraight, in that perfect poise which they are accustomed to assume, their figures represent the ideal which the new corset is trying to impress upon us. But while this ideal with them is the outcome of perfect physical development, with a high and large chest, a slim waist and small hips, the corset tries to shape a slothful figure into the semblance of it, by compressing the hips and enlarging the waist.
