ters to railways did authorize interference with private property rights, for instance where the power was given to expropriate a right of way. How far such rights could be remedied under federal statute was another question. In the case under discussion it was decided in Canada according to the civil law of Quebee "which," said the premier, "is in my opinion the most humane and equitable."

In the department had done its responsibility, and asked whether the governo general could act only on the advice of his ministers or merely as the puppet of Downing street. He complained that it cost only 22 cents per head per the day on these steamers he thought the price of supplies must be very reasonable.

Premier Laurier said the papers would be brought down, and when they were the department had done its responsibility, and asked whether the governo general could act only on the advice of his ministers or merely as the puppet of Downing street. necessary precaution.

Mr. Casgrain pointed out that the judicial committee of the privy council did not decide the case in accordance with English law. The decision was given under the Quebec civil law, which their lordships found to be exactly similar to the English law. The railway company in this control was a charter right to run instance had a charter right to run through the country and it was found that in the exercise of this right, after taking all due precautions, the accident had occurred and was not preventable. He, however, favored a law to compel the railway company to pay for lands not expensively left injuriously affected by the propriated but injuriously affected by the passing of a railway.

The bill was read a first time. House
