

name will have to make answer to me—your husband.”

Molly's flush deepened. "You don't regret having fallen in love with me—even if I am an actress?"

"Yes, I do, Molly." He spoke with a blunt strength. "God knows you are the one and only girl for me. I fell in love with you the first day I set eyes on you, I believe, but it will hurt me more than a little having to break with my old aunt. I've been the very apple of her eye—but she'll have nothing to do with me once we are married. She hates the theatre, poor dear old lady, and she's old. Molly, and I shall know that I've embittered her last years—that I've gone far to breaking her heart."

Molly crushed the carnations in her hands.

"You can give me up. We can easily say good-bye to each other."

"We cannot. We've got to be true to ourselves now—to our love; if anyone has to be sacrificed it must be Aunt Isabella; but I'll be quite candid with you, Molly. If I had guessed when I first met you that you were the celebrated Coralie Leigh, I would have avoided you—just for Aunt Isabella's sake; but now that I know you love me—why, I wouldn't give you up now if an angel came down from Heaven and told me to; it's going to be you and I to the end of the chapter."

Molly gave a queer little laugh—a laugh that was half a sob.

"WOULD it make things better if I promised never to appear on the stage after we were married? I'd do that willingly."

"My darling girl." Clive raised one of Molly's soft little dimpled hands to his lips. "You'd be miserable if I took you at your word; you'd regret your career—of course you would."

"No, I shouldn't," Molly's face suddenly dimpled over with smiles. "Clive, I want you to let me see your aunt this very afternoon. Let me see her alone and break the news of our engagement to her myself."

"My dear—it wouldn't be wise. Aunt Isabella would only say things that might hurt you when you confessed who you were. Besides, there's really nothing you could say or do that would mollify her wrath. She is an old lady of stern principles—most unworldly, for she'd welcome an aristocratic pauper into the family though she'd frown at you, my pet, because you are on the stage."

"Let me try what I can do all the same," Molly pleaded. "I can be very fascinating when I like—oh, most
