

Berrigan lauds Moroz, Vietnamese prisoners

Silence of majority feeds crime of despotism

By FRANK GIORNO
Philip Berrigan, Jesuit anti-war activist and a former political prisoner in the United States, spoke Tuesday at York on the plight of political prisoner Valentyn Moroz.

writer and historian, was imprisoned several years ago in the Soviet Union because of his outspoken criticism of the official Soviet policy of russification of the Ukrainian language and culture. Addressing a small crowd in Curtis

Ex-political prisoner Philip Berrigan, speaking in Curtis

L.H.I, Berrigan praised the Valentyn Morozes of the world for being sources of political and social consciousness in a world which is rapidly becoming a bastion of apathy.

"They stand as the last rampart between us and total terror," he said.

Moroz and the countless other political prisoners dared to speak out against systems of government which they felt to be insensitive to the needs and desires of the people, he continued.

"While in North America the support of oppression and terror can be seen as an economic footnote, in Russia it has become a form of cultural repression."

He alluded to the fact that the sources of strength for a man like Moroz are his religion and culture, the very things which the Soviet officials want to destroy.

Berrigan called for a re-emergence of political and social consciousness among the people as the best method to combat cultural and political despotism.

"The crime of despotism," he said, "is fed from the crime of apathy."

Berrigan lashed out at the cog-in-the-wheel mentality that gives silent approval to institutionalized terrorism such as that found in the Soviet Union and the United States, and paraphrased a passage from Moroz's book, Report from the Barriers.

"The cog enables the tyrant to function. In return, the tyrant molds the cog. A cog is what the Stalins and Hitlers dream of."

This cog mentality, he added, "is what keeps us silent, perhaps because we want to share in the American grab-bag, which is fed by terror".

Berrigan pointed out that in the U.S., a land constantly under media bombardment, there is little awareness of or concern for the 250,000 political prisoners in South Vietnam, who opposed the American-backed Thieu regime.

He felt that in a country where speaking one's mind is permitted, there should be a greater level of protest expressed when government policy infringes upon the human rights of individuals such as Moroz or the South Vietnamese political prisoners.

Tuesday, Le medecin Malgre Lui merely a condoning of the oppressive measures," he said. Quoting Camus, he added that "the other side of terror is public silence".

Even Canadians are guilty of supporting institutionalized terror, he added, by their relative silence concerning the sale of arms to the U.S. for use in Vietnam.

Berrigan remarked that the world has regressed morally to the level of the Bronze Age. Quoting a University of Michigan theologian, he stated, "When the power elite makes it unbearable for the masses, the system is doomed. It becomes unbearable when personal freedoms are repressed and when there is imprisonment for political activity."

"This will lead to a breakdown of the system," he concluded. "The most suggestive feature of a breakdown is the lack of confidence in various aspects of our social system (such as the government)."
