

tries of their nativity, and are to be found, by the thousands, fighting in the armies of their various nationalities.

Mr. Rohold is a loyal citizen of Canada, and subject of King George; and is enthusiastically on the side of the Allies in this great conflict for justice and freedom. But he writes with a deep sense of the tragedy, in which, in a peculiar sense, the war has involved the Jew. Men of Jewish race are confronting one another as enemies on the battlefield. In Russia, too, another drop of bitterness is added to the cup, which the Jew has, in these days, to drink. The tale of the deportations of Jews from one part of Russia to another is very terrible. Mr. Rohold is careful not to lay the blame on the Russian people,
