THE CHURCH A PUZZLE. HER LIFE INDESTRUCTIBLE.

A book has been published -a remark-A book has been published—a remark-able book in its way—by James Anthony Froude, the English and anti-Irish his-torian; a man who hated the Catholic Church with an intensity deeper, if possible, than he hated the Irish people. Mr. Froude, in this work, speaking of the present position of the Catholic Church, uses these remarkable words: "The tide of knowledge and the tide of outward events have set with equal force in the direction opposite Roman-force in the direction opposite Roman-ism. Yet, in spite of it, perhaps by means of it, as a kite rises against the wind, the Roman Church has once more wind, the Roman Church has once more shot up into visible and practical con-sequence. While she loses ground in Spain and Italy, which had been so long exclusively her own, she is gaining in the modern energetic races which have been the stronghold of Protestantism. Her members increase, her organization enthes a closer are energetic gathers vigor, her clergy are energetic, bold and aggressive ; sees long prostrate are re-established ; cathedrals rise, and churches with schools and colleges, and convents and monasteries. She has taken into her service her old enemy, the press, and has established a popular literature " literature.

Evidently the position of the Church is a puzzle to Mr. Froude ; and he con-fesses that in spite of scientific progress and in spite of what would be called and in spite of what would be called religious progress, she still gains, and gains in the energetic nations. "What is the meaning ?" he asks, "of so strange a phenomenon ? Is progress, of which we hear so much, less real than we thought ? Does knowledge grow more shallow as the surface widens ? Is it that science is creaning like a snake that science is creeping like a snake upon the ground, and eating dust and bringing forth materialism, that the Catholic Church, in spite of her errors, keeps alive the consciousness of our spiritual being, the hope and expectation of immortality? Why does Rome count her converts from among the evangelicals by tens whilst she loses to them but here and there an exceptional and un-important unit ?" (Revival of Romanism, pp. 4 and 5.) So the old Church is not dying. The old Church is one day said to be dying and in the next day we find her giving audienc to the nations. We find her an indestructible vitality. - Archbishop Ryan.

LED BY SCIENCE TO FAITH.

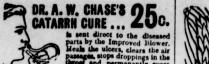

DISTINGUISHED FRENCH SCIENTIST WHO DISCOVERED GOD IN STUDYING NATURAL PHENOMENA.

The death of Henri Becquerel, the The death of Henry Declete, the distinguished physicist, is called by the French papers an irreparable loss to science. He was but fifty-six years old. One might have hoped for many years more of successful research. Glowing tributes to his great achievements will be paid by all the scientific periodicals, but we fear there will be scant mention but we fear there will be search mention of the fact that his scientific work, to quote his own words, "brought him to God and to faith." The funeral dis-course, pronounced by his parish priest, was published in La Croix, September 9, 1908. The expressions used imply that is confirmed Becquerel neglected in early manhood Becquerel neglected his religious duties. His conversion his religious duties. His conversion was attributed by himself to his study of science. Behind the marvelous phenom-ena, some of which he was the happy discoverer, and behind the laws that rule in nature, he discerned the intelligent First Cause before whom he bowed his mind and his heart. Becquerel was in later life a practical Catholic, a faithful attendant at Sunday Mass, and a model in his family, joining in daily prayer with all the members of his usehold. His life is a fresh refutation of the charge that faith and science ar incompatible.—The Messenger.

Here is a Grateful Parent's Letter:

These pictures show the results of two months' treatment with D. D. D. Prescription. My daughter had suffered for five years with terrible skin trouble, all kinds of doctors and remedies having failed. My heartfelt thanks for D. D. D. M. A. HARTMAN, Galveston, O.

D. D. D. Prescription is a purely vegetable compound of Oil of Wintergreen, for external use. There is no kind of skin disease that it will not instantly relieve and permanently cure. Dr. Decatur D. Dennis' theory that eczema is a germ disease, and can be cured only by killing the germs, has been abundantly proved by the remarkable success of his prescription—D. D. D.—in curing thousands of cases that internal remedies had failed to help. Physicians everywhere now accept the theory—and endorse D. D. D.

D. D. D. Cures the Skin Through the Skin

Is it not reasonable that a disease caused by germs in the skin can only be cured by applying to the skin direct something that will kill the germs? D. D. D. will do this, quickly and thoroughly.
