A Quaker of most exemplary character, was dis-turbed one night by footsteps around his dwelling, and arose from his bed and cautiously opened a back door Close by was an out-house and under thief within, who, after a little while asked his supposed accomplice in a whisper, 'shall we take it all ?' The owner of the pork said softly, 'yes, take it all,' and the thief industriously handed the balance through the window, then came himself. Imagine his consternation when, instead of greeting his companion in erime, he was confronted by the Quaker. Both were from worms. astonished, for the thief proved to be a near neighbor, of whom none would have suspected such conduct.— He plead for mercy, begged the old man not to expose him, spoke of the necessities of poverty, and promised faithfully never to steal again.

'If thou hedst asked me for the meat,' said the old man, 'it would have been given thee. I pity thy poverty and weakness, and esteem thy family ; thou art forgiven.'

The thief was greatly rejoiced, and was about to depart, 'Take the pork, neighbor.' 'No no,' said the thief, 'I don't want the pork.'

'Thy necessity was so great that it led thee to steal. One half the pork thou must take with thee.' The thief insisted he could never eat a morsel of it. The thoughts of the crime would make it choke him. He begged the privilege of letting it alone; but the old man was incorrigible, and furnished the thief with a bag, had half the pork put therein, and laying it upon his back, sent him home with it.
