Grand Valley Galt Passengers Must Change Cars at Blue Lake.

The Grand Valley bridge over the Grand Trunk subway near Blue Lake has been deemed unsafe and is now closed for traffic. The result is that passengers for Galt must transfer at the Bridge and walk over. No cars will be allowed to run over the structure until repairs are made. It is thought it will take two or three months to make things properly safe. Now that the city owns the railway, the greatest care has to be exercised against accidents, as the city's ability to pay as compared with conditions under the old company, might mean a crop of litigation which would prove very expensive in case of anything going wrong on the road.
