Half of the total volume of the Half of the total volume of the atmosphere is below the three-mile level, and its density, roughly speaking, is halved for each three miles of ascent. The air contained in a box three feet cube at sea level weighs twenty ounces; at an elevation of fourteen miles it would weigh less than one ounce.

The highest level ever reached by a human being was attained by Dr. Bersen, who, in 1893, voyaged in a balloon to a height of nearly six miles—the elevation of the loftiest clouds, such as we call "mares' louds, such as we call "mar ails," which are believed to be co posed of snow-crystals or ice-crystals. He was enabled to accomplish this feat by taking a tank of oxygen with him, and his thermometer recorded a temperature of 54 degrees below

The above-mentioned free balloon sent up from Berlin, which was called the Cirrus, noted with its automatio thermometer 75 degrees. Meteorologists are of opinion that at twenty-five miles above the earth's surface the temperature is never less than 200 degrees below zero, and that at fifty miles it is not far from the absolute zero of the outer void of space—525 2-5 degrees below zero.

The highest elevation attained by land was reached in 1892 by W. M. Conway, who scaled the summit of Pioneer Peak, in the Himalayas. It is the loftiest point ever trodden by human foot — nearly 23,000 feet above the level of the sea. But Mount Everest, in the same great backbone of Asia, is more than a mile higher and presumably can never be climbed. There is not enough air on or near its top.

In the upper regions of the sea air there is not only no air (adequator human purposes) to breathe, it the cold is such that no warm-blo

A Visit to Anton Lang.

I sat beside Anton Lang in his workroom as his steady hands fashioned things of clay, I ate at table with him and in the evening we pulled up our chairs to the comfortable fiveride where he talked of his coun-ed up our chairs to the comfortable fireside, where he talked of his country and my country, of the Passion Play and of the war.

I had been skeptical about him until I met him. I wondered if he was self-conscious about his goodness, or if he was a dreamer who could not get down to the realities of this world, or if he had been spoiled by flattery or if piety was part of his profession.
