Between The	Just a Little Love
Centuries	Story
BY C. ALVIN.

Nine years before, in that very spot, plain John M. Weils, twenty-file years of age and just admitted to the bar, and Elizabeth Rae, by mutual consent, broke off an engagement that had been made for them many years before, when both were chidren, Elizabeth a couple of years the senior. Jack, as a boy, was really fond of the girl who used to boss him around and scold him well if he displeased her. When he grew up people wonder-ed why he continued to be her com-panion, but when it was said they were engaged nobody wondered. Eliza-beth was decidedly a strong-minded girl, one who might develop into .a girl, one who might develop into a new woman, as seen upon the stage. She could not bear to be crossed in anything, and was inclined to scold, anything, and was inclined to scold, but she had a good heart neverthe-less, and after Jack had once asserted his manhood and pointed out to her her faults, she had-after giving poor Jack a piece of her mind for his pre-sumption—tried, and with a degree of success, to overcome them. That season she and some relatives had come to-the park early and had re-mained until the middle of August. Jack got a couple of weeks off and joined them for the last fortnight of their stay. In the party was a shy, willowy girl, in her early teens—a their stay. In the party was a shy, willowy girl, in her early teens-a child of sorrow if ever there was one. ther stay. In the party was a sny, willowy girl, in her early teens-a child of sorrow if ever there was one. This lassie, whom every one called Teddy, had been buffeted around a good deal for the few years she had lived. She might have been said to have been born with a silver spoon in her mouth; but the groon was ruthlessly torn from her. Her fath-er, who had the ability, energy and experience necessary to build up a great business, and whom all looked upon as a man of great promise, lost his lig in a western Ontario plea-sure boat disaster that had filed hun-dreds of homes with woe. He had been so busily engred in the affairs of the day that he had thought little and done less to provide for the fu-ture, and his young wife and pra-tiling baby girl were left with but little when the estate was wound up. Four years later the young widow, never very strong and wor-ried into her grave over the thought of what was to become of her little one, was laid beside her husband. The nearest relatives were an uncle and a much, younger sister of the child's mother, who lived in New Hampshire, and an uncle of the fath-er, and old aged cripple, who was well to do, a widower, and childless, in the Western States. How and why it came about that the child was sent to the father's mide it would be hard to bell, but it was ent west, would be to the father's uncle it would be hard to tell, but it was sent west,
