The Infamy of Wittenberg Prison Camp.

A Story of Torture.

"What is the story of Wittenberg?" It is a story of torture and a story of murder, a story of starvation, blows, insults, calculated neglect, and deliberate exposure to the attack of loathsome and dangerous sickness," says the Telegraph. "There, on the outskirts of a great German town, a famous centre of education as well as of industry, the things were done of which we were all reading yesterday with a feeling of stupefaction that such conduct was possible in men—officers, guards, medical authorities—who have lived lives not greatly different from our own, and who claim a share, to say nothing of a predominant part, in the civilisation of Europe. "Search as we may throughout that ghastly story for circumstances of palliation or excuse, we look in vain. All that is described happened within the first year of the war, when serious difficulties of supply had not begun to declare themselves.

"These 15,000 or more men were given bad and insufficient food, not because decent food was scarce, but because to maintain them in vitality and power to resist disease was not desired. They were packed together in a space of less than eleven acres not because there was no more room for them in the German Empire, but of set purpose. They were without enough clothing, bedding, or fire through the winter of 1914 because they were prisoners of Germany, and for no other reason.

"The British and French prisoners were compelled by regulation to share their mattresses with Russian prisoners who were well known to be possible carriers of typhus, and when any fell sick it was forbidden to isolate them from the rest. That was not lack of organisation; it was organisation with an end in view.

Doctors Desert the Camp.

"When, on the outbreak of the epidemic, the entire German staff, medical as well as military, deserted the camp, and left these thousands of miserable men in the hands of a few doctors wrongfully kept as prisoners of war, it was not because every German doctor is afraid of disease. When the adequate supply of medical requirements was refused it was not because Germans are ignorant in these matters. The people of the town were allowed to fear at the daily procession of coffins not because German guards have no idea how to deal with mobs. We have taken only a few of the points in this appalling indictment but they are enough. Nearly one-tenth of the 700 British prisoners died, in the circumstances of filth and misery described in the report; of the French and Russians a far greater number. They were murdered men. There can be no other verdict," adds the Telegraph.

The man mainly responsible for this neglect—the Oberstaabsarzt, Dr. Aschenbach—has been awarded the Iron Cross, the committee understand, for his services in combating the epidemic. He entered the camp once while the disease existed, in a complete suit of protective clothing, with a mask and rubber gloves.

"It is pleasant to turn from this callous coward to the English doctors and the orderlies who volunteered to work under them," says the Times.

"Never—even by doctors—was terrible work more nobly done. Three of the officers and many of the men laid down their lives doing it. We hope with the committee that the devoted service of the survivors will not be forgotten."

"The nobility of the warrior has no place in the lazar-house of a soul like that of Dr. Aschenbach," says the Star. "A doctor of medicine even in Germany belongs to a sodality of service and compassion. How can the German colleagues of Dr. Aschenbach hold up their heads and look each other in the face so long as he is not brought to trial and made to answer for his crimes, not merely against humanity but against what is left of German honour and German chivalry?"

"There is a precedent for the punishment of crimes like those deliberately committed by Dr. Aschenbach. The American Civil War ended on May 26, 1865. On November 10, 1865, Captain Wirz, Commandant of the Confederate Prison at Andersonville, after a long trial, was executed for cruelty to Federal prisoners. Let us remember that precedent," says the Star.

JUST LIKE A QUEEN.

An officer who has just been discharged from one of the London hospitals, has been telling me a delightful story of Queen Alexandria. One day Her Majesty visited the hospital, and chatted with my friend for a few minutes. "Do you know what she said to me?" he asked. "She sat on my bed for nearly five minutes, and as she was leaving said: 'I know your needs are well looked after, but if there is anything extra you would like, tell me.'"
