Freak Vessels.

Since that memorable day long ago when our rude forefathers first ventured affoat in their dug-out canoes many very curious ships have been built. Perhaps the most extraordinary of all these freaks was the steamer Connector, which was launched in

The Connector was built in three sections, each of which was, so to speak, a ship of itself. The bow, or in the usual way, was jointed to the midship section by means of a huge George H. Roberts, Stephen Walsh, bolt in such a manner that, as the ship pitched, it could rise or fall quite independently of the other two sec tions. Thus, as the ship met the waves a kind of "wriggle" ran along suit, and finally the stern section > wriggled upwards. The craft passed safely through some very severe trials, and even ventured out in heavy weather. The idea was to build up ships in sections like trains, so that any particular section could be "dropped" at the various ports of call.

A few years ago two remarkable Royal Pier at Southampton, and these vessels were always referred to locally as the "cigar boats." They were invented by Messrs. Winans, of Bal timore, U.S.A., and had four funnels and a flagstaff or polemast; but there was no super-structure of any kind—just a big metal cigar. These ships behaved very well in rough weather; but, for obvious reasons, shipbuilders were not inclined to give up the normal type of craft in favor

The Russians built some very ex traordinary ships in the 'eighties, but the most remarkable of all these freaks was the Royal "yacht" Liva-dia, built in Glasgow for the Tsar Alexander II. in 1880. The ship's hull was built of iron, "shaped like a turbot," and upon this rested the upper part of the craft, which was like a normal steamer. The flat-fish bottom had an area of more than one-third of an acre. The ship was, long, and displaced 7,700 tons of water. She was fitted up as a palace, but failed to complete her journey to
