CAN JEALOUSY EXIST WITHOUT LOVE?

Letter-friend who was interested in the habit of little jealousies, controlled, wants to know what the old question of why jealousy can exist without love, depends on just what is meant by jealousy.

My big dictionary I find this definition of the word jealous: "Apprehensive through fear that interest, affection or the regard as belonging to one is being transferred to another; pained by preference given to another."

It is fairly might be touched. I can hear the cynic asking if such a love ever really existed. I suppose he means between the sexes. Surely mothers have often loved that way.

I doubt it. "In jealousy," says Rochefoucauld, "there is more of self-love than love to another." The highest and greatest love would wish the happiness of its object more than anything else on earth, even if that happiness should be found in the love of another.

More of Self-Love Than Love in Jealousy.

I can hear the cynic asking if such a love ever really existed. I suppose he means between the sexes. Surely mothers have often loved that way.

Mothers Often, Lovers Once in a Blue Moon.

And I have faith to believe that husbands or wives sometimes have. I do not mean that one would not suffer intensely to see someone else put in one's place. But might not one rise above the suffering to a height from which one could feel that all was well if the loved one was happy?

There is a wonderful little poem by Sara Teasdale which describes such a condition. I think it is one of the most poignant little lyrics ever written. I have often wondered how the lost love poems of Sappho could be any more wonderful. I hope some of my reader friends will love this as much as I do—I quote from memory:

"When love comes singing to his heart
That will not wake for me.
I think that I shall know his joy
By my own ecstasy."

"But when he bends above her lips,
Rejoicing for his sake,
My soul will sing a little song,
But oh, my heart will break!"

A Fish Protected by Government.

The memory of "Pelorus Jack," the now defunct sixteen-foot aquatic animal of the dolphin species, until lately so popular among travellers passing between the north and south islands of New Zealand, is a well known fact, according to a writer in an English periodical.

For many years the fish was a great attraction to both passengers and crew of steamers on the run from Wellington to Nelson. Off the entrance to the Pelorus Sounds "Jack" was eagerly looked for by all on deck, and it was only on rare occasions that he caused disappointment. Usually about three or four chains away, he would make his debut by a leap out of the water, and in a few seconds would be racing along under the bow of the ship, keeping even pace, and actually rubbing himself against the sides alternately. At times he would only favor us with his company for a few minutes, but one moonlight night I watched him gambolling in the clear phosphorescent water for nearly twenty minutes.

"Pelorus Jack" was esteemed such an attractive asset that the New Zealand government granted him protection by special Act of Parliament, especially in the face of a wanton act of folly on the part of some irresponsible person who fired at him from the deck of the Jaluna, which ship he never after favored with a visit. It is said by many sailors that he would distinguish the different steamers by the sound of their crows.

THE EVIL ACT.

John Jasper

drove his touring car and overtook a man who looked as though he'd traveled far a footsore also-ran. "Get in and ride," John Jasper said. "I will," the hobo yipped. The slugger John Jasper on the head, and took his purse and skipped. Along that road a thousand boats are chugging every day; and pilgrims who have lost their goats on foot proceed that way. But now no driver stops his wain to give the bobs a lift; he figures it would not be same, since Jasper's dome was bifid. A hobo with a wicked heart knocked Jasper's brow awry and now the drivers speed the cart and pass the pilgrims by. The limping strangers by the score toll up the thoroughfare, and they can catch a ride no more. There are no seats to spare. And some are old and broken down, and some are young and frail, and all must suffer for the clown who swiped John Jasper's kale. A thousand feet with aching come toll onward day by day, and auto drivers, with their horns, demand the right of way. And thus one evil act extends its influence abroad; the comfort of a legion ends because John lost his wad.

Grim Stories

From West Africa.

W. Alan Lethbridge, in his new book "West Africa," gives a clear and interesting account of the West Coast colonies as they are to-day, of their "heat and horror," of their immense wealth, and of their strange medical problems. Wounds in the white man will not heal there and no white child may be born. Nor has the secret of tropical fever been mastered, though Sierra Leone is no longer "the white man's grave."

He has some grim stories to tell—one, which is now of the haunted castle at Elmina, where no one sleeps without a quail. It appears that a party of three men and one woman were playing bridge very keenly in the tropical night. "Of a sudden the lady put her hands to her eyes as though dazzled. Asked if anything were the matter she denied anything, wrong and continued playing. Then again she clapped her hands to her eyes, gave an exclamation and fainted dead away." What she had seen she could not or would not say, but the tradition is that a headless woman walks the castle.

Nor does Mr. Lethbridge reject the power of native magic. He vouches for one strange story; that at a point in the Niger delta in a hut near a store were a number of native workers, under medical supervision. Their headman said it was "so good place." "One morning a Koo boy was reported dead; a post-mortem revealed no apparent cause of death. Next morning two men had departed this life and again post-mortems revealed nothing. On the third morning four men were dead and there was something like a panic."

All the men were at once removed and a fresh batch brought up to be placed in "the same sinister house." They too died in the same mysterious way, and it was decided to burn down the hut. "Then something fell to the ground and was seized by the headman who rushed up to the doctor shouting, 'Here be plenty bad thing, sah! Fi to kill all men, sah!'" He held at arm's length two human finger bones which had been tied together with a bit of native twine in the shape of a rough cross.

When this Ju-Ju was disposed of the deaths ceased. The Niger, delta is not a place for lonely white men to take walks in the gloaming; an instance is mentioned of one "youngster" who did so and "two days later his mutilated corpse was found waterlogged in the sinister mangrove swamp. Nor is it a place to be buried in; we are told that in digging graves the water is reached and the mourners
