Dutch Mail Line Boats Will No Longer Touch Venezuelan Ports.

Willemstad, Aug. 21. - Each day brings a development in the difficulty between the Netherlands and Venezuela, and this morning it was learned that the Royal Dutch West Indian Mail Line had decided temporarily to discontinue its Venezuelan service .

The steamer Prinz Willem V belonging to this line, arrived here yesterday from Carupano. Venezuela, and Supt. Devries was interviewed today regarding the plans of the company He said:

"Although we don't fear that the Venezuelan authorities will molest our steamers in Venezuelan ports, the recent occurrences in connection with the quarantine relations imposed by neighboring countries have obliged the company to discontinue its Venezuelan service for the time being."
