THE WOMAN'S CORNER

AFTERNOON GOWNS

Cotton voile and foulard are the most popular dress fabrics of the season, and lend themselves well to the prevailing clinging styles.

The first gown in this sketch is of tark blue foulard, combined with the same silk in a lighter shade, spotted with gray-green.

The other is in white cotton voile with lace sleeves and blue satin girdle, and long sash. It is worn over a Persian silk slip in which blue and pink The popular low-cut podice and short, scant sleeves, are seen in both these gowns.

And Garcia's story was true—that was the most astounding part of the business. The magnificent jewel winked and blink-The magnificent jewel winked and blinked in the sunlight. It might almost be alive, and telling him in plain language that the gods do not lead men into strange paths without just cause. Suddenly he caught a blood-red flash that reminded him of the uncanny gleam in the eyes of the face on the gourd. The thought was disquieting, but he laughed. "I am becoming a mere bundle of nerves," he said aloud. "The sooner I get soaked with quinine the fitter I shall be. It must be the malaria in my system that makes me see things, Really, the proper thing to do now is to give that beastly mask to the head ju-ju man at Oku. Then it will be off my hands, and he will own the boss fetish of the

He was about to pocket the ring when the question of its subsequent disposal occurred to him. It was such a remarkable object that anyone who saw it could not fail to question him as to its history. Under existing circumstances, he did not court inquiry in that shape. history. Under existing circumstances, he did not court inquiry in that shape, and the queer notion came that, in all likelihood, its prior owner carried it slung round his neck,

"Yes, by Jove, and the cord strangled him," murmured Warden. Nevertheless, not being in the least superstitious, he might have adopted that plan of con-cealing it if he possessed a stout piece of cord or strong ribbon. But his pock-ets contained neither the one nor the other and a sharp pang came with the recollection that, in a case of similar need not so long ago, Evelyn's hussif held a neat coil of tape that would have suited his purpose exactly.

Inside his waistcoat, however, was a secret pocket for carrying money. It was provided with a flap and a button, and would serve admirably as a hidingplace until he was able to intrust the ruby to a bank for transference to London. So there it went, making a little lump over his heart, and reminding him constantly that Demencio Garcia constantly that Demencio Garcia had not deceived him.

He was about to climb down again when his glance fell on the displaced stone. As a tribute to poor Garcia's memory, he put it back in its bed, and even took the trouble to pour a few handfuls of dust and loose mortar into the joints, so that none might know it had ever been removed. While thus occupied, his attention was momentarily drawn to a pair of storks circling laxily drawn to a pair of storks circling lazily above the tower. He wondered if they above the tower. He wondered if they were the same placid couple that had watched him earlier. No bird is more wide-awake than the stork, despite its habitual air of sleepy indifference, and Warden fancied that the noise he made must have disturbed the two sentinels on the top of the building. on the top of the building.

The hill-side was absolutely deserted. Far below nestled the white mass of the town, its long, low, white-washed rectangles broken only by clumps of trees and an occasional dome or minaret. Near the quay lay the Water Witch, Her cranes were busy, two strings of coolies were rushing back and forth across a broad gangway, and the first mate was directing operations from the bridge. Warden smiled. He had heard the flow of language at the "Chief's" command when some incident on ship-board demanded the reading of the riot act, and he could well imagine the way in which the governor's own surf-boat. A cruiser those scampering Arabs were being incited to strenuous effort.

cotton garment of vivid hue seemed to lent its dye to the man's face and Had he been soused in a bath of more completely. Though this extraordinary apparition was fully one hundred and thirty feet above Warden's head, there was no mistaking the malice that gleamed from the dark eyes gazing down on the Nazarene. Under such conditions thought is quick, and Warden was colored "I believe he was worried about a woman," began the other. "What? In Rabat?" "No, no, in London. Only this morning I received a letter from a Mrs. Laing, who says she is exceedingly anxious to ascertain Captain Warden's and ought is quick, and Warden was sure that he had unwittingly invaded the sanctuary of a Mohammedan fanatic. He was minded to whip out the revolver and fire a shot that would at least scare this strange being back into his eyrie. But a British sense of fair play stopped him The blue man, howsoever wild-looking The blue man, howsoever wild-looking, had not interfered with or molested him in any way. He himself was the intruder. The fact that he was undeniably startled did not justify the use of a bullet, even for scaring purposes. The best thing to do was to reach the ground as speedily as might be, risking a jump when he was low enough to be provided to the startless of the second startless than the second startless and the second startless than the second startless and the second startless than the second startl was low enough to select a particula stone on which to alight. His dominant feeling at the moment was one of pique that he had failed to interpret correctly the flight of the storks. If the zealot on top of the tower meant mischief it would have been far better to have met him in one of the upper rooms than to be his mercy while clinging like a fly the face of the wall. He was within ten feet of the pile of rough stones, and was about to drop on one larger than its fellows—in fact, he was already in the air, having sprung slightly outward, when a crushing blow on his head and left shoulder flung him violently on to the very slab of granlte he was aiming for. The shock was so violent that he felt no pain. Consciousness was acute for a fraction of a second. He understood that a heavy stone had fallen or been dropped purposely from the summit of the tower, and that his change of position, helped perhaps by the arched crown of his pith hat, had prevented it from striking directly on top of his head. But that was all. He lay there, with his back propped awk-wardly against the tower, staring up at the sky. He saw nothing but the bright dome of heaven. It seemed to be curi-ously near, and its glowing bounds were closing in on him with the speed of light Then the veil fell, and there was merciful darkness.

Consternation reigned in Rabat next morning. The Captain of the Water Witch began the disturbance over night. but when daylight brought no tidings of the missing Englishman, the British vice-consul talked most unfeelingly of a spirited away without human agency. The Bey was not listened to, so he tried what the Pills have done for me, and would advise other sufferers from this trouble to try them.

What Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for Mrs. Davidson they have done for many others—not only in cases of eczema and salt rheum, but for eruptions and pimples, chronic erysipelas, scrofula, and all other maladies which arise from poor blood. They banish

Now, the Bey knew quite well that the Blue Man of El Hamra made the Tower his headquarters when he visited Rabat periodically to collect subscriptions for the Jehad that was to drive every foreigner out of the sacred land of the Moors. But he kept silent on that matter, for he feared the Blue Man even more than the British fleet. Neverthe-
