MISS ARMSTRONG POINTS OUT BECK'S INCONSISTENCIES

London Liberal Candidate Is Given Enthusiastic Reception Last Night.

OUTLINES PLATFORM

Isabel C. Armstrong, Liberal candidate for London, was greeted with rounds of applause as she made her appearance on the platform in Hyman Hall last night. Miss Armstrong made a striking picture as she took her chair to wait the introductory speech of her chairman, Major W. H. Kippen. She was calm and seemed absolutely at her ease, showing none of the traits of one who hesitates or is not quite sure of the platform for which she is campaigning.

Major Kippen gave a brief address in which he reviewed the campaign from the viewpoint of all political parties, and pointed out that while each party had one or more points of contact or common ground, the Liberals offered a platform which was readily acceptable to all who had public welfare at heart and who really wished to see the province take its rightful place in the forefront of all the Canadian provinces.

Stating that he felt Miss Armstrong's speech warranted all the time at the meeting, he introduced Miss Armstrong, and said that he had not the slightest doubt that when she had completed her remarks they would share his earnest desire to see Miss Armstrong elected as London's representative.

Miss Armstrong then came forward and was again greeted with rounds of applause. Before starting her address she was presented with a gorgeous bouquet of peonies from her supporters.

In opening her remarks, Miss Armstrong dealt briefly and in a humorous manner with her late entrance into the campaign, and said that like most people who started late she was making up for it in working at top speed. She remarked that the tiny son of one of her neighbors had said, "Miss Armstrong, are you running?" "Yes," I said. "Not with your feet, are you?" said her young friend. "Rather," replied Miss Armstrong, "and if you don't think so, watch my feet next week."

The candidate then confined her remarks to a detailed review of the Liberal platform on which she seeks election to the provincial house.

"I feel that I have great moral support from the fact that I stand for each and every item which this platform includes. There is not one little detail which I would seek to alter, and not one plank in this platform which I am not prepared to accept in its entirety."

Her Remarks Applauded.
 This speech was heartily applauded. Miss Armstrong then continued and explained her platform and the hopes she holds of seeing it recorded as legislation. "The Liberal platform stands," she explained, "for better homes and happier and better citizens. The Liberal platform stands on a foundation which is basic and fundamental in character, not fabricated merely for today or tomorrow, but for all time. The foundations of our new Western University bear a great resemblance to the everlasting structural facts on which the Liberal platform is built and on which it will enjoy an everlasting existence," she said.

In enumerating the many points which are included in her platform, Miss Armstrong mentioned the fact that no sane citizen would wish to abolish such humane and Christian institutions as the compensations act or the mothers' allowance. She stated that the Liberal party introduces these measures heartily, and added that not only would they continue to do so, but would honestly try to bring about a standard of living based on the foundation of fair wages for honest work, which would ultimately result in the lessening of the necessity for such measures. In this connection she said that "as a party and as individuals, Liberals stand for everything which will eventually work for the good of not only the people of Ontario, but of all Canada."

Equal educational facilities for city and country alike, is another plank in the Liberal platform which Miss Armstrong pointed out should be acceptable to all right-minded Canadians.

"Only by a uniformly, excellent educational system can Canadians be brought to the forefront of all nations and above all party differences stands the indisputable fact that education should be as convenient and accessible in the rural parts as it is in the cities."

The protection of public ownership, she stated was one of the most important planks in her platform. "The hydro enterprises were founded and brought about quite outside of party politics, and it is in the best interests of the people of this province that publicly-owned utilities should be kept absolutely apart from partisan politics."

She referred to the Globe's statement of 1919 in which it was stated that "Beck does well to insist that both political parties must keep their hands off hydro."

"Having made this statement editorially, it is deplorable to see the good old Globe today welcoming hydro into politics with Adam Beck for the instrument with which the Tories are trying to plunge the hydro activities into the political cauldron."

Urges O. T. A. Movement.
 In speaking of Beck as a public servant who dared to dabble in politics, Miss Armstrong used the humble postman as a concrete example of the inconsistent actions of Adam Beck.

"If a postman who is receiving only $1,800 a year were to dicker in politics how long would he last? Just until his superiors had drawn a line drawn to the breach of regulations. Why, then, should Sir Adam Beck be allowed to do so simply because his salary is $18,000 instead of $1,800?"

The fact of his indifference to public regulations and his falling away from the policy of keeping hydro out of politics should be brought home to him sharply, she declared.

Turning to financial matters, Miss Armstrong said that her descent could be traced back through generations of "outmeal-consuming Scots," and that it was only natural that she should ally herself with a party which carried economy as one of the stoutest planks in its platform.

"The O. T. A. and even a more rigid enforcement of the act we accept as absolutely essential to the welfare and prosperity of the province."

"The Conservative leader has been evasive in his dealing with this issue. I have nothing to hide and no reservation to make. I stand for prohibition and the enforcement of the act in every way which will stop the liquor traffic. I have here a statement signed by hundreds of manufacturers which states that since prohibition has been in force, their employees have enjoyed more prosperity, more contentment than ever before, and any measure which can bring that about deserves the support of all who would call themselves citizens."

Appeals For Support.

Miss Armstrong made a distinct impression on her audience when she outlined the "economy in government" clause in her platform. She stated clearly that she stood for fair and open public tender on all government contracts. She also championed the protection and proper development of Ontario's timber wealth, mines and other natural resources. This would tend toward economy.

In denouncing the reckless spending of the people's money that the province has been forced to put up with during the past four years, Miss Armstrong asserted that there was no more glory attached to dipping into the treasury of the province and taking money out of the pocket of one's best friend.

"I wish to add another plank to my platform," Miss Armstrong said at the conclusion of her address, "and it is greater educational opportunities by securing as much government aid as possible for the University of Western Ontario, thereby enabling every ambitious boy or girl to obtain at a minimum of cost higher education without going away from home."

Then referring back to the contest at hand Miss Armstrong reminded her supporters that the time was short, and that a great amount of work had to be accomplished in the interval between now and the election day.

"You know," she said smiling, "it has been said that it is impossible to elect a Liberal candidate in London. And I have also heard that no woman could ever be elected from this riding."

At this juncture she told the story of the British naval commander, Capt. Carpenter, who was called an impossible feat by tying up the German navy in the Mole.

"Capt. Carpenter, in an interview afterwards said, 'That thing was impossible, so we did it.' Miss Armstrong stated, 'And so I say that if the electing of a Liberal candidate in this riding is impossible, then we can do it.' (Loud cheers.)

At a special meeting of the Liberal executive held at 5:30 in the afternoon Miss Armstrong was formally approved by the London Liberal party as its representative in the election next week, and after last night's meeting careful organization plans were laid, and the enthusiasm which those present at the meeting displayed when their co-operation was sought bore well for the success of London's Liberal candidate.

BETTER HOMES IN LONDON

Who has done more for better homes in London than Adam Beck?

In 1913 before Adam Beck brought Hydro to London the citizens paid 9 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity to light their homes.

Adam Beck reduced the price to 4½ cents—just one-half the old cost.

In 1915 the price came down to 3.3 cents. In 1916, and in every year since then it has been reduced until today electricity costs 1.82 cents.

The average cost of electricity in London homes is a little over a dollar a month.

There are 3,500 electric cooking ranges, thousands of washing machines, vacuum cleaners, smoothing irons, toasters and other appliances, all of which help to lighten the burdens of housework.

Cutting the cost of electricity to less than a quarter of the old price has given London brighter and more cheerful and happier homes.

Besides the great boon of cheap electricity London has many other things to thank Sir Adam for—benefits which affect every man, woman and child in the city—pure water, playgrounds, lake beaches, hospital, sanatorium, university.

When it comes to a promise of better homes Adam Beck's supporters can point to a record of 30 years of performance.

No citizen has done more to improve the living conditions of London for all the people than has Adam Beck.
