Both an Economy

And a Luxury.

Armour's Extract of Beef cuts down the cost of living and makes many dishes more tasty.

Instead of making soups with fresh meat—simply add Armour's Extract of Beef. It gives the rich color, taste and aroma of prime beef. It's quicker, better, easier too.

Armour's Extract of Beef added to roasts, stews, ragouts, "potpies", in fact all meat dishes—restores the flavor and aroma lost by the first cooking.

Armour's Extract of Beef does not entirely take the place of meat—but it makes a small quantity of meat go further.

Use the right way—¼ the quantity of any other Beef Extract.

Sold by all Grocers and Druggists.

ARMOUR LIMITED, - - TORONTO, Ont.

Armour's Tomato and Beef Catsup

An appetizing relish for steaks, chops, roasts, pork and beans, and fish of all kind. It is just a little bit better than others. At all grocers.

Vincent Harper Gives Interview

Author of "The Mortgage on the Brain" Tells of His Life and History.

Was Given to Understand His Wife Was Dead When Married to Present Wife.

"I am a rebel. The narrow conventions of the East, the deadening sameness of their cities, the petty littleness of their small limitations, I have left forever behind me. Here is freedom, here are the rough, strong characters from which American literature will receive its inspiration. Here I shall do my work, and here I shall live." The words are those spoken to a Post-Intelligencer reporter by Henry Austin Adams, known to numberless readers as Vincent Harper, whose stories of Father Joseph Aloysius McCann, now running in the Saturday Evening Post, are the bid for fame which he expects to assure by the novel he is now writing.

A Room and a Typewriter

The scene was the author's room in a Seattle boarding house. Ascetic in its appointments, its principal feature was a typewriter. There were only two chairs, but one of which was desirable, and this was pressed upon the reporter. Black pipes were produced, and a tobacco which was recommended by a "chappie" in Victoria.

"I am a rebel. I am done with conventions. But when I say that, do not apply it to my views on the marriage relation. I believe in the laws of marriage. I believe in monogamy and the love of one man for one woman.

"I don't want to talk about my family affairs. The minute I learned I was married to two women, I separated from the young lady who is now in Victoria, and have not lived with her since. She takes a very noble view of it. She does not press me to get a divorce from my wife. I have taken no steps to do so. I have lived in Seattle two years. I can vote here. I could have sued for divorce long ago, but have not done so, and have no present intention of taking such action. I find myself in a curious situation. What more could man do than I have done?

Married Under a Mistake

"I met the young lady now in Victoria, whose name I would not wish you to mention, after I had been given to understand by a relative that my wife was dead. I don't know time before this that same relative had balked my earnest attempts to bring about a reconciliation. The young woman at Victoria, whom I ignorantly married, is not the same the New York Sun talks about, saying I had known while living with my wife. I think I know whom the Eastern papers refer to. It is a different person.

"I send money to my family in New York. I support my children. I am trying to fulfill all my duties to them. What more can I do? Place yourself in my position."

The atmosphere of Harper's room is one of unremitting labor. Leaning back in his chair, with his pipe tightly grasped in his hand, the author's personality is one of energy. A broad laugh is never far off, and every word is hearty. He speaks as a man of culture and much travel, but his great success when it is written. I have other stories of life in the Sound country. Some of them are now in the hands of the publishers. It is in Seattle that I shall do my work."

Mr. Adams made the peculiar confession to the reporter that he thought in the Spanish language. "I was pretty well grown before I could talk English," he said. "My father lived a strange life. He met my mother in Caracas, Venezuela. She was a Spaniard. He then became a planter in Cuba, and it was there that I was born. I was educated in Connecticut, and then wandered among the German universities for some years. There I studied under the disciples of Karl Marx. I am a socialist.

"I am a socialist, believing in evolution. The good time will never be brought about by any popular cataclysm. That would mean ruin. It will come by forces that are working now, called by different names. Look at the trusts. Are they not reorganizing society on new lines? Life then will not be so different from what it is now. The inefficient will still suffer.

Marriage a Permanent Institution

"Monogamic marriage is an institution that will last, whatever changes come. It not only has the support of religion, but of science. I have grown from some of the ideas that were expressed in a book I wrote in my young days which some clever reporter served up in the shape of an interview referring to a false story he told of my family relations. Besides, those views were even then put into the mouth of a character which did not represent me.

"Marriage was established because it fitted the needs of a society in the struggle for survival. Nourished by church and state, perhaps the instinct has grown weak, and now that church and state are weakening their grip over our conduct, we see the result of the enervating tutelage. But the greater the freedom the laws allow, the sooner will nature re-establish her necessary institution. I am a Catholic, and I try to live by my religion. I am also independent. I have never surrendered a single idea that seemed to me the truth."

Hiaso Sota, a little ninety-five pound Japanese woman, who caused the arrest of J. F. McCullen, an athlete and sparring partner of "Terry" McGovern, Tuesday night in New York, after she by jiu jitsu had thrown him flat twice on the sidewalk, in 125th street, proved that the Japanese art of self-defence was no idle fad, by demonstrating in the Harlem police court Wednesday just how she had floored McCullen.

Miss Sota appeared in court accompanied by Koyta Yoshmure, an interpreter. The hearing was a polyglot one, French, Japanese and English being the languages employed. The court room was crowded with spectators. Miss Sota was asked what McCullen had done to her.

"She say he grab her shoulder," said the interpreter.

"Did he say anything to you?" asked Magistrate Barlow.

"She say the man did," was the interpreter's translation of the little woman's reply.

"What did you do then?"

There was an animated conversation between the interpreter and Miss Sota, at the end of which the interpreter told Magistrate Barlow that Miss Sota was unable to explain.

"Suppose she show the magistrate what she did," suggested Bicycle Policeman Whitman, who had arrested McCullen.

This was interpreted to Miss Sota, and she nodded a smiling assent. McCullen, who was an interested onlooker, moved back a bit, as if he feared the experiment was to be tried upon him. But the interpreter enacted the role of the man to be floored.

Miss Sota, after the interpreter had put his hand on her shoulder, as McCullen is alleged to have done, grasped the interpreter's other arm with a quick motion, shoved one of her tiny feet forward, and the interpreter, who weighs 165 pounds, was hurled backwards to the floor. The exhibition was not a satisfactory one to the pair from the Land of Cherry Blossoms, evidently, for Miss Sota signified a desire to do it over again.

This time Yoshmure scarcely had touched the little woman's shoulder when he was sent flying through the air over Miss Sota's head, landing on the floor with a thud that shook the room. The spectators, who had climbed on chairs to see the exhibition of the little woman's prowess, cheered, and the magistrate leaned back in his chair and laughed heartily.

"She threw me even higher than that," remarked McCullen dryly, after the mirth had subsided a little. Then he explained that he thought he knew Miss Sota when he saw her on 125th street, or he would not have spoken to her.

Despite this explanation Magistrate Barlow directed that a complaint of disorderly conduct be made out against him, and he was fined $5. Miss Sota and her escort left the court-room smiling.

"What a country! What a people!" he exclaimed. "The strong, the enterprising, the able that have left the East searching for broader fields. Characters with all the strength and the roughness of nature. What a field for the writer, the poet and the artist.

Seattle Teeming With Character

"Character! Seattle is teeming with it. I spend my days wandering along the water front, I linger in Judge Gordon's police court, I journey with the Siwashes in their canoes; on every street corner I meet with material beyond the needs of any writer.

"It is the strong that have come West. Once here, their corners do not get rubbed off; they stand out with the salt savor of pure humanity. This country will furnish the authors, the musicians and the writers for the nation.

"My Father McCann stores are the best I have yet done. I have tried to portray a character I used to know in New York. But in Seattle there is material for a writer that New York could never equal, and it has not been touched. The lodging houses in the lower districts are filled with strong men. The Alaskan adventurers, the seafaring folk, the wanderers from the length and breadth of the West are all here. There will be a literature of strength when it comes in its time.

Writing a Novel Now

"I am writing a novel now. I don't know what to call it. The title may be 'In Back,' meaning back in the Olympics—no man's land out towards Flattery, not the Hood Canal side. Up in those mountains are found a people like no other on earth. They come from back in Maine, perhaps, or Virginia. I think it will be my big success when it is written. I have other stories of life in the Sound country. Some of them are now in the hands of the publishers. It is in Seattle that I shall do my work."

Mr. Adams made the peculiar confession to the reporter that he thought in the Spanish language. "I was pretty well grown before I could talk English," he said. "My father lived a strange life. "I have been having very poor health all winter. I doctored with our family doctor but was relieved only while taking the medicine. I took Dr. Pierce's medicine several years ago. I knew it was good for any one suffering with female trouble. Have taken only one bottle and am gaining strength very fast. I could not eat nor sleep when I began taking the 'Favorite Prescription.' Heart troubled me and I had cold and numb spells till my heart would almost stop beating. Have had one child since first taking your medicine. If I continue with your treatment am positive I will be cured."

Things Not Apparent Are Considered as Non-Existent—Maxim of Latin Law

THE "LIGHT" OF A STORE

"HIDDEN UNDER A BUSHEL"

Ceases to Be a Light at All

Publicity, which is the light of a store should not be snuffed out now and then. Some merchants think that to keep this light always burning costs too much—but, for that matter so do many other things cost too much.

For example: Your store rent is too high—when your business is poor; you have too many clerks—for a dull day. Yet these things don't worry you for a moment when things are moving everybody busy or overworked—especially your cashiers—and when you wish you had more room more clerks, more stock!

Of course you never had one of those busy days that was not the result of aggressive advertising. And you never had a blue trade-day that did not follow a practical hiding of the publicity light.

"ENTERPRISE IN SPOTS"

yields, at best only Spots of Prosperity. A steady "store light" of increasing candle power (inches of space used daily,) with the "Snuffers" and the "Bushels" Sent to the Cellar—and store-growth and expansion will come in a measure that will amaze you.

"Our of Sight, Out of Mind" sums up the plight of the occasional advertiser!
