The Sweating of Goods in Iron Ships-Mot ture Condenses and Ruins Other Carge.

From The London Economist.

Genuine sea damage, i. e., damage by actual contact with sea water to goods on board ship, has largely decreased since wood gave place to iron and steel in the building of ships, and sail to steam. Iron does not offer the op ship, has largely decreased since wood gave place to from and steel in the building of shaps, and sail to steam. Iron does not offer the opportunities which wood does to water to find its way into the holds of vessels. The consequence is that perishable cargoes are more salely carried than they were, so far as sea damage is concerned. But there is an internal enemy to the soundness of cargo, as well as the external sait water, in the shape of condensed mosture arising from the goods themselves. And unfortunately the damages of concess. Sometimes when cargo is improperly shipped damp and shut up in the loid of a vessel on a long yoyage, it is to be expected that the mosture will et suporate and damage other goods on board. In such a case, of course, both merchant and Captain are to blame, the merchant and Captain are to blame, the merchant for tendering and the Captain for receiving goods likely to damage others.

But sweet is not confined to goods shipped wet, rice, for inctaince, may be apparently perfectly dry when shipped, and yet may become very shot and center a vapor while lying closely stowed in gunny bags in the hold. The vapor tisse, and commer muo contact with the cold ceiling, cound-uses, and e-ther falls onto the top tier of goods, causing damages for mindense group and the continuation of the whole, and merchant and underwriters find, to their cost, increasing damages from internal causes. In some cases merchanta have gone on receiving damages from internal causes. Testing it by Degrees. Old Lady (to grocer's boy)-Aren't those very small apples in that barrel, boy? Boy—Yes'm on top, but down below they're great by fellows.
Old Lady—Isn't that very unusual, to put the smail fruit on top?
Boy—Yes'm; but the boss has just bought a motto to hang up on the wall. "Honesty is the best policy," an'I heard him say that he'd try the new fake on the apples, just to see how it worked.
