

States relations is attested to by the numerous references to the United States in most of the papers.

This report poses some basic questions which it attempts to answer. Where it does not give the answer, it tries to suggest some of the factors which need to be taken into account in thinking about such unanswered questions. It is a reflection of the Government's concern about the need to deal with questions Canadians have raised about the country's foreign policy. To do so, it seemed very desirable, and even necessary, to look at the whole policy picture and to think about it in comprehensive terms. In considering this policy report, Canadians should be asking themselves: "What kind of Canada do we want?". Canadians should be thinking about that question and in those terms, because in essence what kind of foreign policy Canada has will depend largely on what kind of country Canadians think Canada is, or should be in the coming decade.
