

NUGGETS.

From speech Robt. Rae, Esq., Secretary National Temperance League of London, Eng., delivered before Canadian Temperance League, Toronto, July 25th, 1890.

He saw no reason to criticise the constitution and rules of the Canadian League, which he had carefully examined; indeed, if the rules were carried out, the organization would do an immense amount of good.

Too little attention has been paid on both sides of the ocean to individual work, and to the adoption of means calculated to ripen the fruit; there was too much inclination to pluck it while green.

He was pleased to observe that one phase of the League's work here was the training of the members themselves.

The way they got money in England was, first to give some themselves, and then invite others to give.

He believed that if the work were undertaken earnestly money would come in spontaneously.

The people must be taught that investment in temperance work pays.
