LONDON, Nov. 13.—The gun which fired the first British shot in the Great War figured in the uneventful ceremony at the Artillery Memorial, Hyde Park corner, on Armistice Day.

The officer who gave the order to fire the first shot was Major R. L. Palmer, D. S. O., M. C., who, as a section subaltern under Major A. R. Forman, commanding the old "B" Battery, R. H. A., transmitted his senior officer's order and brought No. 9 gun of the battery into action on Saturday, August 22, 1914.

That was at Binche, 10 miles from Mons.

At present the war-scarred 13-pounder is at St. John's Wood Barracks, and Major Palmer is leading the "B" Battery of today in the Wembley Tattoo.

PUBLICITY SHY.

Major Palmer Palmer avoids publicity, which accounts for the fact that very few people know of his distinction. Those few did not include the Artillery Commemorative officials.

When asked to tell again the memorable story of the day when the first shot was fired by British Artillery in the Great War, Major Palmer said: "What I can remember most clearly about that day was that just before we fired I had an argument with Sergeant Carter about the cartridge cases. He wanted to know whether we should save them, and reminded me that in manoeuvres we always did."

RANGE TOO LONG.

"I remember, too, that as a cavalry brigade passed us one of the officers called out, 'The fox is viewed.' He was, like the rest of us, under the impression that the Boche was going to be the fox on the run."

"At 9 o'clock in the morning the range was given us, and one minute later the first shot was sent over to the Germans. But it was not effective, for a very good reason. They were 6,500 yards away, and our extreme range was 6,000."

"We sent 80 rounds rapid firing over in their direction, and soon afterwards they came closer in such numbers that we got the order to retire."

"It was a very jolly little party that started that morning. We had been continuously on the move since leaving Dublin on August 12, and had had several days' marching, so that we were dog tired, but full of cheerful spirits for all that."

WOMAN SEES EXECUTION.

GLASGOW, Nov. 13.—Mrs. Betty Magistrate, was a witness at the execution of John Keen, convicted of murdering a peddler in a brawl. She refused to send a substitute, saying her duty as magistrate entailed attendance.

AUTO ACCIDENT.

Miss Vera Ross, daughter of Samuel Ross, 111 Elliott row, had her jaw fractured last evening when an automobile in which she was driving ran into a hole in the Red Head road, near Edith avenue. The auto was being driven by C. W. Thompson, 12 Park street, who had with him Mrs. Thompson and the Misses Vera, Muriel and Daphne Ross. Miss Ross was taken to the General Public Hospital by F. E. Josselyn and is undergoing treatment there.

Dead Easy to Get Glasses

You don't have to count the contents of your purse before entering Sharpe's. If there is only a dollar left after your other shopping—that's enough.

It surely would surprise you to know the large number of people of good income who find their purses a bit empty by the time they come to Sharpe's.

Far more important than the proper price is the good you get out of Glasses—both in seeing better and in overcoming the heavy nerve strain that goes with eye-strain. Four in five suffer needlessly.
