

PROHIBITION EASES
POLICEMEN'S WORK

Sigh With Relief at Disappearance of Fighting, Crying and Singing Jags

The Auto Dodger Vanishes and Many More Types Which Are Broadly Spoken of as "Drunk and Disorderly."

Now that the prohibition enforcement act is everywhere in effect, it may be well to record some police impressions of a type of prisoner which is in a fair way to disappear entirely from the life of the city, says the New York Times. It is a type classed by the police as "drunk and disorderly," and although the public is more or less unfamiliar with the type, the police have been intimately acquainted with it for years. Since the enforcement act, much to the relief of the police, this prisoner has ceased to be a guest at the station houses.

"There are many types," a police lieutenant said, "of intoxicated prisoners, but perhaps the most common is what we call the Saturday night drunk. He is the type which starts out on payday night to have a good time, and then after imbibing too freely gets into a fight and winds up in a station house cell. Regularly on Saturday nights many such found their way to the station some with cut and bleeding heads and others without money or valuables."

"Another type that we all dreaded, yet which never failed to put in an appearance, was the fellow with a 'singing jag.' On being brought into the house he would at once burst into song, if you could call it such. He would keep it up in his cell until the wee small hours, and neither threats nor pleadings had any effect on him. He would keep both cops and prisoners awake most of the night."

"His antithesis was the fellow with a 'crying jag,' who on being dragged to the desk would tell you, shedding tears of contrition, that he had never been arrested before, and was disgraced forever. Seeing this had no effect, he would tell you confidently that he belonged to one of the oldest and best city families, and that if he was not granted his liberty instantly the cop who locked him up, and those responsible for his shame would hear from the mayor or governor in the morning."

"A less familiar type is known as the automobile dodger. This individual liked to cross busy streets and see how near he could come to passing automobiles without being struck. It tickled his risibilities to the breaking point to see the discomfiture of some chauffeur who almost upset his car to prevent hitting him."

"Perhaps the worst 'drunk' and the kind most dreaded by a policeman is the 'fighting drunk' who wants to lick every one in sight, but whose greatest ambition is to lick a cop. Needless to say, ways end most disastrously for Mr. Drunk, because his ready fists are no match for a policeman's billy. Similar to the drunken pugilist is the purely destructive fellow. He may not care exactly for a fist encounter, but he delights in breaking dishes or furniture, as a rule his own, and is tickled to death if he can smash a mirror in a bar-room."

"A common variety is the flirtatious drunk. He is ordinarily a well-behaved person who would not think of annoying a lady if he were not under the influence of liquor, but on being lit up he imagines that he is irresistible and that every pretty girl he sees is eager to make his acquaintance."

"There is the 'profane drunk' and the 'hell-roaring drunk,' the latter usually being a little fellow who wants you to believe that neither Dempsey, the best cop that ever wore a uniform, nor the late John L. Sullivan in his prime was a match for him. He is the last person in the world who is really spelling for a fight, and if it came to a showdown he would run for his life. He is all bluff and bluster."

"The intoxicated chauffeur is another type. On running down a pedestrian he is charged with felonious assault, reckless driving, perhaps, and intoxication. He is not too drunk to realize the seriousness of his predicament and on being locked up he will deny that he was drunk while operating his machine. The police do not always depend on their own judgment but send for an interne from a city hospital, and one way of making a test is to have the prisoner walk a straight and narrow line."

"The police often do what they can to assist well-meaning but intoxicated persons who have found their way to station houses. After several of these have spent several hours in sleep in station house cells they are given a cup of warm coffee and are usually able to go to night court, where, after being fined, they return to their homes, more sober and wiser men, and are able to go to work the following morning."

Antimony Mine.

Walter F. Dixon, of New York, vice-president of the Antimony Mine Co. has come to Lake George to supervise the installation of a boiler at the mine, which weighs eighteen tons and of 250 horse power. B. Mooney of St. John, has the contract. When the boiler is installed the main shaft, which is now sunk 900 feet, will be extended to 500 feet, making drifts east and west, or every 100 feet level to the mine, and mining operations commenced.

Alkali in Shampoos Bad For Washing Hair

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali, for this is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulled coconut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.
