The Shooting Affair in the Police Court.

FULL REPORT OF THE EVIDENCE: [By our own Reporter.]

Samuel Isaacs, brought up on the complaint of John Guthrie of the Waverley House for firing three shots from a Smith & Wesson revolver on Tuesday evening, January 12th, was arraigned this morning before Judge GIBBS, S. Alward, Esq., appeared for prisoner. The Court was crowded to excess, pistol shooting being a novelty in this city. The charge being read to Isaacs, he did not deny it, but he had enough sherry, at the same time, to get rid of that man, meaning Whittman. Whittman then went into the dining-room and sat down to tea; Mr. Guthrie came in. Here Mr. MacShane remarked that ordinarily Whittman is a kind, good hearted, decent little fellow, but when he takes a glass of wine he fills him with an animosity towards his fellow folk, foreigners, &c. Whittman said for a chop, but saying witness eating some fish, said he would share with him. He then heard Whittman muttering something about "Cruelty, Jew," and looking at Isaacs, who was in the room. Whittman said he was in a fainting condition, into No. 9, a room of the office, devoted to the use of the proprietor's family. Whittman returned to the office, and found Isaacs standing, and assisted one, who appeared to be in a fainting condition, into No. 9, a room of the office, devoted to the use of the proprietor's family. Whittman returned to the office, and found Isaacs standing, and assisted one, who appeared to be in a fainting condition, into No. 9, a room of the office, devoted to the use of the proprietor's family.

Whittman then made a rush at Isaacs but witness seized him to take him away to his room.

The reason witness took hold of Whittman was that on previous occasions, when Whittman had used offensive language when he was intoxicated, he told witness if he ever saw him that way again to take him away. Witness had hold of Whittman all the time the shots were being fired. The last witness saw of Whittman this morning, he was going out for a drive. Thinks Whittman has no desire to prosecute this matter.

DOCTOR JAMES CHRISTIE was the next witness. He practises medicine in the city and boards at the Waverley House. About half past seven went into the room. Whittman was sitting at the end of one of the tables. Mr. McShane was on his left, Dr. DeWalt was on his right, did not notice any one else at the table; took my seat at the first table. After taking my seat I turned around and saw Isaacs come in. I thought he looked pale but on looking at him now perceive he looked exactly as he does now. In a moment heard some remarks from Whittman, and on looking around saw him with the peculiarly offensive look he puts on when intoxicated, standing in the most tantalizing manner at Isaac. I thought I heard Isaacs say he would pay him up for that before the evening was over. Whittman, as if addressing those sitting beside him, said "he is a damned coward." Isaacs made a movement as if he was about to rise from his seat, Whittman then said "cruelty" or some such word that witness could not catch exactly. Isaacs drew a revolver and discharged it directly towards Whittman, the parties then rushed at each other and met between the tables; the second shot was then fired. They grappled and both fell on the side of the table. Isaacs put his right hand behind Whittman's neck, with the pistol in his hand pointed behind his ear, it was in that position when it was fired the third time. Some parties then disarmed the prisoner, and the pistol was handed to Mr. Guthrie—witness spoke to prisoner and asked him how he came to forget himself so far as to use a pistol in a public dining-room. He said he had been insulted most outrageously and could not come even into tea without being insulted. He said he was sorry but couldn't help it.

Cross-examined. Whittman is the most offensive man I ever saw, particularly when he is drunk, which is the rule with him. He always appears to want to fight. I noticed him one day brandishing his cane over a small man. He generally picks out small men. It was only after the offensive epithets had been used several times, that the prisoner was about seven feet distant from Whittman. If any shot struck Whittman it must have been the first. The charge must have been very light or the bullet would have gone through him. Prisoner said he had been insulted about his religion most outrageously, and he was sorry for what happened, as he didn't want to kill any man. The parties around did not know any symptoms for Whittman. The man who was in the coat might easily have been made by Whittman himself. I think Whittman is capable of doing anything. I think Whittman should not be dignified by being shot at.

DOCTOR MORRIS, Porter at the Waverley House, was the next witness: Saw a row between Whittman and Isaacs in the afternoon. Whittman was drunk and noisy, and seemed to be making quite a row for a row. He brandished his stick about. Whittman was near the stove and Isaacs behind the counter.
