From 1901 to 1905 the London reunions were held biennially. Each succeeding gathering has surpassed its predecessor, until 1905, the year of the city's golden jubilee, there was a gathering and a celebration that excelled all—such as was never before witnessed in London or any other Canadian city.

and expense in preparing for their entertainment on so large a scale every two years, suggested that the reunions be in future held triennially. The suggestion was brought before the annual meeting of the International Association, and as it came from the city's guests, there was no option but to adopt

Claude Brown

So much effort had been put in to make this last reunion the success it proved that many of the visitors, believing it was too much to expect the "Home Guard" to devote so much time it. This brings us down to the reunion of 1908, which there is every reason to believe will prove to be "the daddy of them all."
