> Fighting for Existence. "As time went on the conviction grew and deepened that Germany was fighting for her very existence. Though obliged by the necessities of the situation to attack, the view constantly inculcated upon the people was that Germany was and is on the defensive. There are no means of getting this notion out of the public

"Gradually the bitterness of feeling toward England increased. It is now intense. The Germans had been Minara's Linimes hopeful that, in the event of a European war, England would at least be neutral. Some even dreamed that England might be on their side. They never imagined that she would declare war upon them. The declaration of war was consequently a great blow, was m. though the phrase of the King of Bavaria—'So much the mbetter; the more "Yes." varia—'So much the better; the more passed from mouth to mouth. At the time I felt, and I still believe, that had the attitude of England been plainer, Germany would have shrunk from making war until she was quite sure that England would stand aloof.

Only Thorough Defeat Will Do. "Now nothing short of thorough military defeat will convince the German people that they can be beaten. Otherwise there will be no peace except on Germany's own terms. The people are prepared to suffer, much as they may dislike the inconvenience to which the war has put them. This is particularly true of States, like Bavaria, where I spent some time before leaving the country. "If the Bavarians could be given a smashing blow there might be a rapid end of the war, but they are now as persuaded as they were at the beginning that their Generals and their oldiers cannot be defeated. Even a

We must for the sake of a reconciliation with England abandon none of the war-aims which we have achieved by conquest and which we deem it ne-cessary to retain in the interests of our country. The only important thing is to weaken England's power and to strengthen our own to an extent that would allow us to impose peace upon England, willy-nilly, and to make her recognize our right to existence, our right to the future, our right to access to the world and to the world's oceans.
