

WELL-KNOWN WAR CRIES

The Romans cried "Pro patria" as they charged in battle, but when they were at close quarters with their enemy they preferred the word "Feri!" which means strike!

The French in those times were nearly as rich in battle cries as the Irish, for in some of the old French chronicles we find many cries. The men of Vadenay shouted "Au bruit! Au bruit!" "On to the fight! On to the fight!"

The British in the reign of Henry the Eighth forbade all the men of Ireland to use such words as "Butler-Abu" or "Crom Abu" and desired them only to call on St. George or on the name of their sovereign lord the King of England.

The Irish had not a national cry, but two exclamations in battle were in use generally. Spencer tells us that they used one very common cry, "Ferragh, Ferragh," which might have been an exclamation of warning like "Beware. Another cry is better known, the wild "Abohe," which he spelt Abu or Aboe. The Welsh also used this cry.

BRITISH AND FRENCH In British battles the word "Hurrah" has been shouted vigorously, and the French soldiers are said to have used it frequently. But now apparently they prefer their well known cry "En avant," or "A la baionnette," when delivering the final charge.

In the old days the Gauls charged in battle with a wild cry of "Amiah" on their lips, and it is supposed that the word means "The warriors are coming," and was the origin of "Hurrah." Medieval soldiers were supposed not to utter this cry until the great moment had come, and then to shout it with all their might.

EN AVANT. During the Franco-German war, as a shower of bullets fell close to Marshal Canrobert, one of his staff said to him: "If you remain here, marshal, you will certainly be killed."

And the great man replied: "Quite likely; but, even if I should get killed, what then?"

We read that the soldiers at Jemappes and Fleurus fought under unusual conditions. When the firing was brisk an officer representing the people intoned "The Hymn of Victory," and immediately the general placed his helmet, surrounded by the tricolour, on the point of his sword and held it aloft so that the whole army could see it. Then the soldiers charged the enemy, shouting "En avant! En avant!"

At Reichshoffen, the French Balaclava, this famous battle cry was often to be heard. The French general, to ensure the safe retreat, ordered the cuirassiers to charge the enemy, so as to gain time. They knew that it meant certain death for them, but no one man touched, and as they dashed forward they shouted their famous battle cry, "Forward, forward! We are fighting for France!"

ONE ON THE FACTORY

Sent to Investigate Lawyer Feldman's Complaint Against Potash and Perlmutter's Shop.

A very much puzzled young man presented himself to the elevator starter at the Cohan Theatre Building in New York City recently and explained that he had received a complaint against a cloak and suit factory in the building which was said to have failed to comply with the factory laws. He confided the fact that he was a newly elected factory inspector, and that this was his first assignment.

It was a maine day and Mr. Woods happened to be around. He listened to the young man's story and promised to help him. He led the way into the theatre, the first act was on and Lawyer Feldman, the villain of the play, was denouncing as unsafe the old-fashioned factory of "Potash and Perlmutter."

It took the young man some minutes to grasp the fact that he had been made the "goat," but he remained to see Montague Glass' famous firm move to their elaborate quarters in the second act of Potash and Perlmutter, and then sheepishly begged Mr. Woods to say nothing of the visit. But the story is too good to keep. Don't fail to see this play at the Grand Opera House, Thursday, March 16.

Music and Drama

GETTING ATMOSPHERE FOR POTASH AND PERLMUTTER.

The utmost fidelity to detail marks the production of "Potash and Perlmutter," the dramatization of Montague Glass' famous stories that Manager A. H. Woods presents at the Grand Opera House, on Thursday, March 16, direct from its second year at the Cohan Theatre, New York. Scenic artists, carpenters, property men and electricians spent weeks in the cloak and suit factory, and the production while similar visits were made by the various members of the company under guidance of the director, Elmer Ford, in order to secure the absolute "atmosphere." And it must be remembered that all the work was done by the "sweatshop" district of New York to its very minutiae, peculiarities, strenuous as the work was, however, the artists and mechanics agreed that the experience was the most interesting of their lives and the result of all this painstaking effort lent much to the tremendous success of this play.

ALLIED AVIATORS

Raid Essen, the Home of the Krupp Gun Works.

By Special Wire to the Courier. New York, March 15.—A news agency dispatch from London this afternoon says: Allied aviators have raided Essen home of the Krupp gun works, according to despatches from Amsterdam today.

Other air squadrons have attacked Munich, capital of Bavaria, and the city of Goldbach, the despatches said. The allied aviators destroyed six sheds at Essen, the Amsterdam Telegraph reported.

The news has not been confirmed by the war office, but aroused great enthusiasm here. Since the beginning of the war, aeronautic experts have been urging a great allies raid on the Krupp works at Essen, which lies about 170 miles north of the French lines at Verdun.

The Germans are known to have taken great precautions to guard against air raids, both on Essen and Goldbach, about 60 miles southwest of Essen, where German machine guns and munitions are manufactured in large quantities.

If reports of the aeroplane raid on Munich are confirmed, the raiding flyers have made one of the largest bomb-dropping expeditions of the war. Munich lies nearly 250 miles east of the French lines in upper Alsace.
