through Europe in the summer of 1910 I was in his marty, writes Lawrence F. Abbott in the Philadelphia Public Ledger. When I joined him at Khartoum, at the nead of the Nile, I found that his daily engagements were so nu-merous and his correspondence so voluminous that he needed somebody to act as his private secretary. It was a pleasure to volunteer to aid hin in this capacity, and although at firs he protested that he was not willing to transform what was planned as a sort of vacation journey into what proved to be a period of somewhat exacting work, I finally persuaded him to let me do what I could to help him. The result was that he the one corner and stood by a small table engaged in talk and Jaughter. The rest of the party gathered a hundred feet away on the opposite side of the room. In the party were the Empress, Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Minister of the Interfor and many other distinguished and powerful imperial officers, naval, military and civil. Before long I noticed some slight signs of agitation on the part of some of these officials. The Chancellor, von Bethmann-Hollweg, went up and whispered to the acceptal officer of the army in charge. They then quietly consulted with the Minister of the Interfor, taking out their watches for comparison. Next they went and spoke to the Empress, who began to look a little anxious. Indeed, the signs of agitation grew so marked that I turned to a young aide-decamp who spoke English perfectly and whose acquaintance I nad made coming out in the special train and asked, what the trouble was "Why." he said, "the special train and asked, what the trouble was the Emperor gives the signal for departure pretty soon the train will be delayed."

Now the German empire runs so like clockwork that the delay of a special train is a serious matter. It is ilkely to throw the whole machinery out of proper working order. And yet not one individual in that special train are fighting side by side for the varieties of the part of the protocology are found in the spirit of the world. We may be a long way from this situation, but this does not prevent us from doing drawn closer and closer together, and the time will probably come to emphasize and closer together, and the time will probably come to special train is a serious matter. It is ilkely to throw the whole machinery out of proper working order. And yet not one individual in that special train is a serious matter.
