OFFICIAL.
LONDON, Sept. 8. Three Zeppelins visited the Eastern coast last night, and dropped bombs, seriously damaging fifteen small dwellings and starting several fires. Ten people were killed and 46 are reported wounded or missing. The French Government report continued bombardment along the Western front. The British fleet bombarded the coast as far as Ostend, and enemy aviation shelled at Ostend were attacked by air craft. The Russian report indicates a check of enemy attacks at some points. There is no material change elsewhere. The Italian Government report small local successes.

LONDON BUDGET.
LONDON, Sept. 8. Almost simultaneously with the announcement that the Emperor had personally replaced the Grand Duke Nicholas as Commander-in-Chief of the Russian forces, fighting along the Eastern frontier, despite the beginning of the autumn rains, has been resumed with an intensity which characterized it throughout the summer on both sides in Courland north and Volhynia-Podolia in East Galicia. South the Russians are making determined efforts to regain the initiative, while in the centre the Austro-Germans continue to increase their advantage. Thus, Field Marshal von Hindenburg and his commanders in Courland are still being denied their objective, the Dvina River, while von Mackensen and the Austrian generals on the other end of the line are engaged opposing the Russian offensive. In the centre, on the other hand,

General Von Eichhorn and Prince Leopold of Bavaria, are pushing forward, and, according to a Berlin official report, have occupied Volkowysk, an important railway junction immediately east of Bialystok.

It is for these railways that the Germans are now fighting, as when the autumn rains turn the great part of the country into an impassable marsh they will need every line of railway to keep their armies supplied with provisions and munitions.

Another day of heavy artillery engagements is recorded on the Western front, where, also, there have been a series of air raids as well as the bombardment of the German coast batteries by the British fleet.

The Italian claim to have captured several Austrian positions on the Cadore frontier, while on the rest of the Austro-Italian front only artillery duels have occurred. This long distance fighting appears to be the feature of operations in the Dardanelles, where, according to accounts from Constantinople, the Turks successfully bombarded the Allies' positions at Anatarta and Seddul Bahr. The Zeppelin raid on England last night resulted in the death of thirteen persons, ten of whom were women and children, and wounding 43, of whom thirty were women and children. This brings the grand total of casualties from Zeppelin raids up to 102 killed and 263 injured.

MORE INNOCENT VICTIMS.
LONDON, Sept. 8. An official statement respecting another air raid, issued by the Press Bureau, says: Hostile aircraft visited the eastern counties and London district on Wednesday and dropped incendiary explosive bombs at midnight. A few casualties have been reported, and some fires, which are under control. The number of casualties will be communicated to the press in the course of to-day.

The message concludes: "Beyond our common frontier, which does not separate, but unites the forces and aspirations of our two countries, my thoughts and best wishes follow you to the French Army, already crowned with victory. I look forward with absolute certainty to the final successes of the Allied armies."

THE CZAR ADDRESSES GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 8. In relieving the Grand Duke Nicholas of his command, the czar addressed to him a communication reading as follows: "At the beginning of the war I was unavoidably prevented from following the inclination of my soul to put myself at the head of the Army. That was why I entrusted you with the Commandership-in-Chief of all land and sea forces. Under the eyes of all Russia your Imperial Highness has given proof during the war of steadfast bravery, which caused a feeling of profound confidence, and called forth the sincere good wishes of all who followed your operations through the inevitable vicissitudes of war. My duty to my country, which had been entrusted to me by God, impels me to-day, when the enemy has penetrated into the interior of the Empire, to take supreme command of the active forces and share with the army the fatigue of war, and safeguard with it Russian soil from the attacks of the enemy. The invasion of the enemy on the Western front, which necessitates the greatest possible concentration of the civil and military authorities, as well as the unification of the command in the field, has led me to appoint you Viceroy of the Caucasus and Commander-in-Chief of the valiant Caucasian army. I express to your Imperial Highness my profound gratitude and that of the country for your labours during the war."

The Painmeter.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Some instrument like a thermometer that can be put in one's mouth and measure the amount of pain one is suffering is an invention much desired by a friend of mine.

He is a normally healthy person who has just passed through an illness. The amount of pain he suffered was one of the important symptoms, and the doctor and nurse were continually asking him how much. I don't know whether you'd call it a pain or a discomfort to-day. I wish there were some way you could find out for yourself same as you find out my temperature. You wouldn't want to depend for that on asking me how hot I felt, would you, and I can't tell you about the pain any more accurately."

No One Can Know What Another Suffers.

It is a strange and interesting thought that no person can possibly know anything about the pain another suffers.

Perhaps we all have different measures of pain. Perhaps what your neighbor calls a terrible headache you would consider a mere passing discomfort not worth mentioning. Or, contrariwise, perhaps what he calls a slight pain you call the doctor for.

How Do We Know What He Has To Bear?

Sometimes we say that this person or that does not bear pain well. How do we know? How do we know what he has to bear? We say someone makes a terrible fuss over a little pain. How do we know that it is a little pain? Another's pain, no matter how deeply we sympathize with it, is always a ghostly, unreal compared to the flesh and blood reality of our own pain.

No One Can Feel Another's Pain.

The incommunicability of pain is something I have often marvelled over. Someone you love is suffering intensely; you sit close beside him; you hold his hand in yours; but the pain is as far away from you as if you were on the other side of the sun. Of course that is natural and inevitable, yet sometimes doesn't it seem marvellous to you that two can be so close in heart and body and one suffer so intensely and the other be perfectly free from that pain?

It is simply part of the eternal isolation of mind and soul, to which, in spite of all our loves and our intimacies, we are all condemned.
