Revival of Smuggling

EXPEDITION COMES TO GRIEF OFF SOUTH COAST.

Memories of the old smuggling days were vividly called to mind at Lewis. A daring attempt was made the other day to run a cargo of brandy on the coast of Sussex, but the enterprise was spotted by bad weather and the vigilance of the Customs authorities. The sequel was the appearance before the Lewis magistrates of Leonard Gray, shipping agent of Rosebery-avenue, Finsbury, and John Edward Gray, of The Chase, Kingswood-Surrey. They were accused of attempting to evade Customs duty on brandy illegally imported, and with importing brandy in a ship of less than 40 tons. Leon Chevallier, the owner of the French trawler Maria Bertha, of Kosen, was charged with being on board the vessel carrying the brandy. Mr. Beattie, prosecuting for the Customs, told the Court that on October 29 a trawler was noticed entering the harbour at Newhaven without flying her flag. She was boarded and found to contain 81 cases of brandy, and everything pointed to the fact that she was trying to run the cargo of brandy to the Sussex coast. A motor car was stated, awaiting the brandy at Cuckmere Haven, on the coast where the Cuckmere River splits the cliff and makes an ideal Cove for smugglers. The trawler danced too long and too merrily and the land-lubbers were so gossack, that the skipper put into Newhaven, where, as stated, the trawler was boarded by Customs officers. Chevallier was defended by Mr. Mainwood, the French consular agent at Newhaven, who pleaded that the French Captain was only the dupé of someone else. The magistrates came to the conclusion that Chevallier had no guilty knowledge, and they dismissed the charge against him and declined to order the confiscation of his ship. One of the Grays asserted that he thought the goods were to be imported in the regular manner and declared to the Customs. A Crown witness in reply to a question, stated that it was within his knowledge that there was considerable trade with

America in refreshing spirits in spite of the restrictions, and he added it was a fact that there was a large number of American agents in this country who were on the track of these particular goods. Mr. Charles Dingley, defending, argued that there was no fraudulent attempt on the part of the two defendants to evade the duties. He added that it was owing to the bad weather that their ship was forced to come into Newhaven. The magistrates convicted the two defendants, imposing a fine of £200 with 15 guineas costs on each. There are many people who never use any toilet soap but Ivory and find this the most economical and satisfactory soap to use.

Locked Room Secret

POLICE SOLVE MYSTERY OF NIGHT SCREAMS.

English Girl's Opium in Nursing Home. In a padlocked attic of a nursing home at Lugano, the Swiss police have found an English girl of 26 named Mabel Constance More. It is believed that she was born in 1897 at Holsworthy, in Devonshire, but she is not now known in that town, though, of course, there is a possibility that she came from an outlying district. Her sufferings in the nursing home from cold, hunger, and inattention were terrible. The discovery followed on complaints by neighbors, who alleged that all night long, night after night, cries and sobs could be heard coming from a room somewhere under the roof of a house which was formerly a boarding establishment, but was recently turned into a clinic. It is recalled in this connection that the communal authorities refused their sanction to the transformation, but they seem to have closed their eyes to it when it was effected. Since the neighbours insisted that a woman was shut up in the house the police made inquiries. They satisfied themselves that there was something in the story and a commissioner, accompanied by two constables, visited the premises. The proprietors were absent, so they set about a search, and presently came to an attic, the door of which was fastened by three massive padlocks. They burst the door open and were confronted with a lamentable spectacle. Stretched on the floor they found a haggard girl, gnawing at a dry crust which she was grasping in her hand. The room was bitterly cold and in an extremely filthy condition. The girl appeared to have become demented, and she has been removed to an asylum at Mendrisio. It is asserted that she was "interned" at the house on the order of a doctor, and at Lugano, where the affair has caused great excitement, it is demanded that the police shall follow up this clue and trace the parties responsible for the girl's sufferings. The Archibald Shoe Style Exhibit continues till Friday Morning—Feb 13.
