"Well, Clinton, what says the doctor ount your patient?" he demanded as a came up.
"I have not seen him since he went in. at here he comes to answer for him-

My servant is down on the shore, waiting to take you over," said Captain Graham.

"I'll attend you down, doctor," said Herbert, taking the old gentleman's arm.
"And as I reign undisputed king here, I suppose it will be only a polite attention to visit my wounded subject," said Captain Graham, approaching the cottage. On entering, he was presented by Nrs. Ben to her glests.

Equally surprised and pleased to find so protty and biquant a little lady as Mrs. Yaughan, the young captain took a seat beside her, and entered forthwith into conversation. Mr. Vaughan scowled at the handscme young captain from under his black eyebrows, but said nothing. And Mrs. Vaughan mutually delighted by the agreeable and geutlemanly newcomer, flung aside her novel, forget her entut, and laughed and chatted with a volubility that amazed and delighted her companion, who immediately entered into a war of wit, words, and repartee, during which the time sped rapidly away.

Mrs, Ben was the only auditor, however, who seemed in the least to enjoy their smart saylags, and sharp, with retorts, for Fritz, under the unfailing eye of his aunt, was groaning in spirit, as he sat plucking fowls, with a haste and energy that brought great drops of perspiration to his brow, hearing every time he ventured to look up a shill "You, Fritz," that instautly set him to work again with renewed vigor. Jessie, pale, silent, and thoughtful, bent over her sewing near the window; and Mr. Vaughan's scowlgrew every moment darker and darker.

At last, after two delightful hours, Captain Graham arose reluctantly to go, saying—

"My sister will, doubtless, be here in aday or two, Mrs. Vaughan, and then you must become our guest. Meantime, I shall be delighted to show you my island home, and assist in every way I can to make the time of your stay pass as pleasantly se possible.

Mr. Vaughan's midwight brows grew illand is a thundercloud, and blacker, if possible, as his wife gaily replied—

"Thank you, Captain Graham. Notining could give me more pleasure; so to-morrew I take an inventory of your enchanting isle."

"Shall you, madam?" muttered her husband between his teeth. "We shall see about that!"

All therest of the evening Mr. Vaughan was just as eilent, sulky, and sour as he knew how to be, which is saying a good deal. And that right, after they had retired to the inner room, which Mrs. Ben had vacated for their time, he took her to task in the fellowing manuer—

"Pray, madam, may I ask what business you had giving that fellow any such promise as you did?"

Now Mrs. Vaughan had seen her hishelf begroundless jealousy all the evening, and had been excessively annoyed thereby, fearing Captain Graham might observa it too, and wonder at it. Therefore, feeling justly indignant, she coolly replied—

"Because, sir, it was my good pleasure to do a "!"

Because, sir, it was my good pleasure

"Indeed!" — and the dark brow fore-boded a storm—"indeed, Mrs. Vanghan!
And is it your intention to go boaming with this fellow alone, through the island with this fellow alone, through the island to-morrow?

"Most assuredly, Mr. Vaughan. How astonishingly elever you are at guessing!"

"Madam, you shall not go!"

"Sir I, shall go," said the lady, imitating his tone, exactly.

"Have you no respect for yourself, madam—none for me, your husband?"

"Not the least, sir."

"It will be on your peril if you go."

"No it won't—it'll be on my feet."

"Silence, madam!" he thundered, grinding his teeth with rago. "Do not dare to be impertinent, or you will repent it."

Electwood.—The December number of Diackerood's Magazine comes to us in its season plain style, and shows no consciousness of the approach of the Christmas scason. Indeed, interposing, "Agathon," and "The Cato of Lucan," it is rather suggestive of heathenism, but probably when the articles were prepared, the cheering odours of mines pies and plumpuddings had not reached, the olfsetory organs of the writers. The story of "Valentine and his Brokheft" is not yet finished, and we have another part of "Alice Lorraine."
