At Bay St. Louis the Crescent City contingent was joined by about 400 men and boys from the surrounding country. The betting was 2 to 1 on Mace. Col. Rufus Hart was referee. Mace had from Allen and Jem Cusick in his corner, and Coburn's seconds were from Kelly and Tom McAlpine. In the first round the men sparred avagely, and Joe succeeded in throwing Mace heavily, the odds shifting to even money. For several counds Coburn had the best of the argument. Mace hurt his wrist badly in the first round, but Joe did not know it. Jem fought a clever defensive battle, and Coburn didn't have the nerve to go in and try to finish it, so after three hours and a half of stalling Col. Hart ordered the men to fight or quit.
