He reports that the censorship of the press, telegraph and cable exists only to the extent that matter of an incendiary or seditious nature suppressed. As to the progress the revolution it has for the month been practically nil. In first place no general of Cubans has taken place; no provisional government has been formed; no stand against the government troops has been made, and no engagement of sufficient imwho attempted to rebel were promptly arrested. In the province of Santiago de Cuba, at the eastern end of the island, the nature of the country and the number of sympathizers has made this section the natural choice for the landing of filibustering expeditions and war material.

The leaders found men to follow them and bands of 50, 100 and 200 men, were formed. Not half of the men were properly armed, but nearly all carried some sort of rifles, shotguns, machete or revolver. There are from 2,500 to 3,000 men in these bands. They form no concerted force, but forage among the plantations for subsistence, and occasionally have a skirmish with small detachments of government troops. They hope to tire out the Spanish troops, and seek to prolong the conflict until the rainy season sets in, when yellow fever may do more destruction than their bullets.

Under Governor General Calleja active operations were delayed and clemency extended to all who foreswore their cause and pledged submission to the King of Spain. With Martinez Campos, the new governor general, in the field, personally pushing active operations against the insurgents, the outcome will not be long in doubt. Had the movement been supported by the influential Cubans and properly led, some show of success might have been looked for. The leaders are not capable of intelligent or systematic handling their men, and many of them have been
