only a little lower than the angels. We should like to see him a better animal bestian. If he choose, he can then be a better reason Our demand is for better homes, for dwelling of thay may be better temples for to cover the whole divine beauty. Yet this does not is much—not all. subject of human relations, it is much—not all. The finger of Providence points farther—higher.

We need a more thorough, expansive, genial education. It ought to be different in degree as well as in kind from what is now the prevailing fashion. Admitting with glad thankfulness that education has done a great and good work, we cannot be insensible to the fact, that, tried by a correct standard, it has not attained its end to the extent it should have done. If education is God's institution as every one must admit, if it is charged with the sacred responsibility of moulding mind and character, if it is its glorious office to put human beings on the right path of progress and supply no small share of those impulses which are both to stimulate and control its future movements, if such is the acknowledged and accepted theory of education, why does it so often fail in executing its purpose? The nature of the materials on which it works, the infirmities and vices rooted within us, must, of course, be taken into the account. Giving these a due weight in our estimate of practical results, and sympathizing heartily with the many earnest and devoted spirits toiling in this department of philanthropic service, we can not resist the conclusion that our systems of education fall far short of meeting the demands enlightened reason and Christian revelation have on them. Do what they may, education must be, to a large extent, the individual's own act in after years. This is providential law, and cannot be set aside. Nevertheless, education, as popularly considered in connection with schools and colleges, has a most important province to fill. It is supplied with instruments to accomplish its task. It has time and opportunity to employ its agencies. Yet it frequently misses its aim, and leaves its subject, in many cases, either unqualified or disqualified for a true and noble career.

It is a common frailty to expect too much of men and their systems. The cant of the day is extravagant and ridiculous in its claims, ignoring difficulties it ought to allow for, and magnifying the machinery of means out of all just and true proportions. Granting all this, we have a right to demand that education shall, at least, start the germs of development, and, as a general rule, train its subject so that he shall have both the ability and the disposition to train himself in subsequent life. But how many retire from our institutions of learning fitted in any high sense to do this work? We can count men by scores, within the circle of our own acquaintance, who have come away from college with a positive distaste for all study; men without any ove for books, having no sort of affinity with cultivated society. Others, rising a few grades above these, are utterly insensible to the intellectual and moral incitements of the time, and drift with the age in passive obedience to the momentum of its current. Selecting the best class of these so-called educated men, few go into the world alive to the serious claims of the day on thinking minds, and fervently in unison with the heart of Providence. With too many the vain Diploma is the last chapter of their mental biography; "finis," mournful "finis," might be stamped on the parchment; or, indeed, the whole thing might be regarded as a classical inscription on sepulchred brains.

Various improvements might be introduced into the machinery of popular education. Text-books, especially, might be made something more than dull collections of facts and principles—wire-bound skeletons of science. The knowledge if vitality were infused into it. But it is the living teacher that needs a broader adaptation to the work. By him is the student to be awakened and disciplined. Diagrams, illustrative experiments, books, are far inferior to him in their relations to mental culture. Every student should be taught to feel that real education begins where acquisition ends, and in this higher development, opening so vast a field for the intense exercise of all his more sympathetic and inspiring faculties, the teacher ought to rise to the dignity of his position. Too much of our learning is for this reason a cold, inert thing. Had we men like DAVY, CHALMERS, WILSON, who could combine exactness with impulsive energy—who could be scientific in statement, in argument, in detail, and yet carry the fervor of a glowing soul into all their efforts—who could collect ample materials for the exposition of a great topic but think them of little worth until they had been fused into a living mass—what an office of power and glory this might be made! Teaching is a ministry. It is the pulpit of the natural, social world; and though destitute of the sanctity, the divine impressiveness of the Sabbath pulpit, yet, next to that, it is entitled to reverence. Such a sentiment ought to animate the hearts of those who fill this vocation; such a sentiment ought to be cherished in society toward them: and thus, set apart by the homage of public opinion to this hallowed work, and consecrating to it their talents and enthusiasm, they would soon find their generous ardor and fruitful genius reappearing in their pupils.

Our folly, we hope, has calumniated, and we ought now to be prepared, by the failure of ambitious experiments on impossibilities, to form a a sensible ideal of what scholarship ought to be. And what should it be? A scholarship suitable to the three-fold sovereignty of intellectual, social, political rule; a scholarship in which science, art, and literature shall be subordinate to manhood because of the position, scope, and bearing of manhood in our country; a scholarship without cloistered monkishness or bookish deadness; a scholarship that should cultivate sentiment and impulse as well as reason, and not crush out instinct by the pressure of routine and formalism. Sobriety of judgment, free from frozen stiffness; accuracy without morbid pedantry; boldness chastened by humility, and independence restrained by charity; cordiality without slavish fawning; energy, and not recklessness; fertility without a crop of tares mixed with the genuine grain; the present in harmony with the past, and the future as a product of both, souls as well as brains; worldly adaptations without worldly corruptions; religion preserved from degrading superstitions on the one hand, and from the evils of excessive sectarianism on the other—these are the qualities that ought to distinguish our scholarship because of their relation to the liberated mind, bounding heart, and manifold opportunities of our country.

Compare our cultivated intellect with this standard. Take our best educated men; the majority of them are scholars, mere scholars, chained down to college-chairs, or, if in the world, dwelling apart from their fellows, and lost to the active service of their countrymen. They are known by their books; but what a defective, half-souled scholarship is that which, amidst the restless, sweeping, heaving tides of this century, is only seen and felt in the waif that floats upon their waters! Look at another class. They are fresh, earnest, hearty thinkers, abounding with large ideas, and gifted with commanding utterance. Three-fourths of them are ultraists. They breathe out fire. Their images leap from volcanoes, and they fight with a sword-flames. These men exert influence. You can trace that influence. You can trace that influence in much of the feeling and writing of the day. CARLYLE has taken possession of some of them bodily. They are panting for a heroic age—convulsed with a passion for crusades. Others, not quite so sturdy, try to feed on their pabulum, and get, for their pains, a cramp-colic in their non-digesting skulls. All this is humiliating enough. It is a shame on our cultivated intellect that so much of it is found either in the one extreme of indifference or in the other extreme of over-excitement. Yet this is, to a great extent, the state of the case. The middle ground between these extremes is occupied by a decreasing number of men, who are too often sneered at and despised. What a commentary on our cultivation is read in these facts! Now, it must strike every thoughtful mind that what we urgently need is the solution of the problem, viz.: Can we have earnestness without extravagance, imagination without wild romance, talent in full strength, and genius in vigorous might, without vehemence and rashness? This is the pressing problem for our education to solve. Advancing civilization has brought its perils; and never, more than now, have men needed the serene faith that restrains reason within its just limits, moderates zeal, destroys arrogance, presumption, violence, and humbles our whole nature into perfect subserviency to the Sovereign Will that rules the world.—Ref. & Tel.

In the Valley of Annapolis, for sale, or in Exchange for City Property!

THE Subscribers will Sell or Exchange for City property, that very valuable and beautiful FARM owned by them, and situated on the high road in the township of Granville, six miles from Bridgetown, and eight miles from Annapolis Royal, N. S., containing 350 Acres, about 40 of which is superior dyke marsh, 150 well timbered, principally with hardwood, the remainder in pasturage and tillage, all of excellent quality, more than usually free from stone, and at present in a superior state of cultivation. The Orchard is in a very flourishing condition, the old trees (of which there are quite a number) have all been grafted within the last seven years, and borne well the last two. There are also about one hundred young trees of the best American varieties,—and also a few Pear and Plumb Trees, which will probably bear this season. The Buildings are in a thorough state of repair, and comprise a large two story HOUSE, with very superior Cellars and every convenience requisite for a Country gentleman's residence; a COTTAGE for farm manager or servants, and STABLES and BARNS, which, for comfort and convenience cannot be surpassed in the country. The Farm cuts from 60 to 70 tons of Hay annually, and can be increased to almost any extent, as the River is very convenient, the mud of which is an excellent fertilizer. There is a complete assortment of Farming Implements, and also a good stock of all kinds of Animals required on a Farm, which will be sold either with or without the Land.

To any person wishing a really good Property and pleasant Residence, the Subscribers can confidently recommend this, they having spared no expense for the last eleven years to bring it to its present state of perfection. Should the purchaser wish it, one half the purchase money may remain on mortage.

The soil is that of the finest description, admirably suited for a Pottery or Brick Yard, as wood can be obtained at a low price, and in any quantity, and also sand This property is distant about three fourths of a mile from the Farm above mentioned.

TO MILL OWNERS.

WE are now prepared to manufacture and introduce Improved and very Valuable MACHINERY for GANG SAWS and EDGING TABLES recently Patented.

The improvements in Gang Saws consists in a new method of feeding the log, by which the spurr rolls are superceded, and the consequent waste and damage done to lumber, amounting to from one to two and a half per cent. is saved.

The log is also more firmly and securely held and fed forward with more certainty and uniformity, thereby improving the manufacture, increasing the quantity sawn, and reducing the risk of breakage of Machinery.

The improvements in Edging Tables consists in saving the entire travel of the men averaging about one mile to every thousand feet of lumber sawn. In addition to relieving the men from excessive labour, the more rapid movement of the table enables them to edge a much larger quantity of lumber and with much greater economy, literally doing away with the "haste that makes waste."

These improvements may be attached to Mills with but little alteration and moderate expense.
