said enough. I believe you will be sympathetic, yet I also realise that the position you hold is no sinecure and that in guiding or advising on the general policy of a university, anything in the nature of an innovation would require infinite and tact and patience to establish.

We realise out here that you are in a much better position to judge what, if anything, could be accomplished in the east along the lines of ideas set forth, and if perchance we note a discussion of the subject amongst eastern students we will know whom to thank.

Trusting you will pardon this liberty,

Yours in all sincerity and respect,

John J. Honeyman
