The British Colonist, having enjoyed the confidence of the Canadian Public for the past ten years, while each day adds to the many proofs already held of its influence, the Publishers are encouraged in their exertions to render it yet more serviceable, than its many testimonials show it has already proved.

As its name implies, this journal will, in all cases, seek to advance the interests of this great Colony concurrently, and in connection with those of the Imperial Kingdom. Repudiating colonial servility, it will ever advocate British Connection. To inform Canadians, and those numbered among Her Majesty's subjects in British North America, what is passing among themselves, will be the first duty of those who have its conduct. The proceedings of the Provincial Parliament, and the movements at the Seat of Government, will be reported comprehensively, and chronicled with the utmost care and attention. Agriculture, and any intelligence that can advance this interest, will ever be a prominent feature in the columns of the British Colonist; while the latest and most correct intelligence in Maritime and Commercial affairs may be confidently relied on. The Markets will be carefully scanned. European intelligence will form an important feature. The "glad tidings" borne by each packet from the shores of Britain, will be handed to the subscribers to the Colonist, within comparatively a few minutes after the arrival of the Packets.

Added to the ordinary channels of information, the Publishers have secured the services of a gentleman resident in London, whose literary acquirements, and commercial experience, entitle his communications to the highest consideration.

To Advertisers, the Publishers need say but little; the number this journal already commands, is the best evidence of the advantages conferred on those who avail themselves of its circulation; and in any future, as in all past occasions, a due regard will be had to the claims of those who shall confide their interests to its advertising columns, while every exertion will be made to satisfy those whose patronage has placed the British Colonist in its present flourishing position, that their countenance has not been bestowed in vain.

Every advantage that the Magnetic Telegraph, and the new Weekly Line of Packets, from Liverpool to the New Continent can make available, will be enjoyed by the Subscribers to THE BRITISH COLONIST FOR 1848.
