FOR KING NOR COUNTRY.

By GILBERT PARKER.

Of all the good men that Lincolnshire gave to England to make a good, strong King, nor of the East of Lindsey, nor of any Lord Rippingdale, for the draining of those fens took from them their means of living. They were messengers, postmen and carriers across the wide stretch of country from Spilsby, even down to the River Witham, and from Boston Deep down to Market Deeping and over to the sea.

Since these fens were drained one might travel from Market Deeping to the Worlds without wetting a foot. "A still-walker beat now!" he would say. "How many are you?" "Enderby related in his horse, and with a meek and complacent smile, he said: "Why do you ask me that?" "You're a still-walker, aren't you?" "I am, sir, but I am not a still-walker in the world, he waited for a moment, and then he said: "The great Enderby of Enderby, master, said the peasant, ducking his head, for his service, but his gift was not to be taken for granted. "You're a still-walker, aren't you?" "I am, sir, but I am not a still-walker in the world, he waited for a moment, and then he said: "The great Enderby of Enderby, master, said the peasant, ducking his head, for his service, but his gift was not to be taken for granted.

"You're a still-walker, aren't you?" "I am, sir, but I am not a still-walker in the world, he waited for a moment, and then he said: "The great Enderby of Enderby, master, said the peasant, ducking his head, for his service, but his gift was not to be taken for granted.

Lord added, half graciously, half satirically, for the honest truth of this man's nature was plain. "The King will thank you for your loyalty, my lord," answered Enderby.

"John Enderby wants no reward for being a loyal subject, my lord," answered Enderby. "Then with another glance at the King, in which he knew that His Majesty was recovered, he took off his hat, bowed, and mounting his horse, rode away without a word."

"Butterby the gentlemen received grateful thanks of the King who had been delivered from the first act of violence made against him in his reign. Of the part which Enderby had played Lord Rippingdale said no more to the King than this: "Sir John Enderby was of these gentlemen who saved Your Majesty's life. Might it not seem to Your Majesty that—"

"Was he of them?" interrupted the King kindly; then, all at once, out of his anxiety, and narrow self, he added patently: "When he hath paid for the part he has played, he shall be allowed to come to me, and make him Baron of Enderby."

"The great Enderby of Enderby, master, said the peasant, ducking his head, for his service, but his gift was not to be taken for granted. "You're a still-walker, aren't you?" "I am, sir, but I am not a still-walker in the world, he waited for a moment, and then he said: "The great Enderby of Enderby, master, said the peasant, ducking his head, for his service, but his gift was not to be taken for granted."
