BLOOR STREET VIADUCT.

The argument is used against the Bloor-street viaduct that it will make a lot of property owners rich. But no such argument was used against the and of renewing the contract with the or the Dundas-street bridges.

Supposing, however, it does: what happens? That all this property that ago. is to be made valuable by reason of the viaduct will be available for taxation in the next big improvement that is to be carried out. The real test to apply is not, will the improvement pay for itself beforehand. but will it build up, expand, become revenue-producing, increase the assessable land enormously? This is what the viaduct will do. It will add millions to the assessment, balance off the city, for Hamilton to take all its power give the city two growing sides instead of one, will release the whole of East Toronto from the double fare incubus of the Toronto Railway and its Kingston-road radial.
