

entertained of his recovery; and the mail that has just arrived, brings tidings of his death. But we are not left to sorrow respecting him, as those that have no hope; we believe that he "rests from his labours," and by the blessed light of that Divine Word, which he was the honoured instrument of 'holding forth' to thousands in benighted lands, he has now "entered into the joy of his Lord." May God grant that we, "who are alive and remain," may be found at our posts when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, for "blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."
