Not Easy to Advise a Mayor So Thirty Leading Citizens of Indianapolis Discover Mayor Shank Appointed Them to Help Him With Their Counsel, But They Couldn't Agree

Indianapolis, June 26 - The experiment of Mayor Shank in seeking the help of an advisory commission of thirty leading citizens has not proved satisfactory to him or to the members of the board, and it is not improbable that the scheme will be abandoned.

When Mayor Shank was a candidate at the Republican primary was questioned as to his purposes by some leading members of the party. He replied in substance that he had no definite plan, but that he was going to try to get the city council and the city fathers to help him in his administration.

The mayor and the council of the best men in the city, he said, should be elected to help him in his administration. He said that he would be governed by the party as advisers and would be governed by the city fathers.

The mayor's advisers went to work with zeal, but soon interest began to lag. Committee meetings were not attended and at the regular meetings of the board there were always a failure to agree. When it was suggested that the mayor be advised along certain lines some of his friends on the board declared that such a course would be presumptuous and the resolutions were generally killed outright or else changed so that they became meaningless.

Some of the members thought that they were selected to give advice. The thing that was a failure to agree. When it was suggested that the mayor be advised along certain lines some of his friends on the board declared that such a course would be presumptuous and the resolutions were generally killed outright or else changed so that they became meaningless.

The city father requires the mayor and the heads of departments to meet for conference once each month, and some one in the advisory body discovered that this provision was being ignored. A resolution was offered calling the mayor's attention to the requirement and asking him to conform to it. There was violent opposition to the suggestion, but it finally carried, and for once the advisory board got some pertinent advice.

But advising a mayor was attended with so many difficulties that the men who composed the body wearied of it and concluded to put themselves on record for something. That was where the brewer and the minister collided.

E. M. Barney, formerly a member of the Anti-Saloon League, offered a resolution reciting that it was the sense of the advisory body that saloons be confined to the mile square or business district. He asked that the resolution be referred to the committee on public morals. Another member moved that the resolution go to the committee on municipal welfare. It happens that the public morals committee is made up of preachers and the municipal welfare committee is made up of brewers and their sympathizers. The motion to refer the resolution to the latter committee was intended of course to kill it. There was long a contest and the resolution finally went to its death. The ministers are disgruntled in consequence.

What is regarded as the beginning of the end came in a letter from the mayor calling attention to the fact that certain members did not attend the meetings and asking that they be dropped. The request was complied with, and one or two labor representatives, one or two business men and a preacher or so left the board. The mayor says he will not fill the vacancies.
