DRINKS IODINE

Woman Is Taken to Hospital—Is Expected Today to Recover.

Mrs. Sarah Smith, who last evening drank some iodine, is expected to recover, according to a report from the hospital today. She was living with her sister, Mrs. James Wolfe, in Main street, and owing to a lengthy illness is thought to have become despondent.

For six months she had been kept to bed with rheumatism and had been suffering greatly. Last evening in the absence of her sister she asked her brother-in-law to get her a bottle of iodine which she said she intended rubbing on her knee. He procured it and then went out. A short time later when his wife returned she found her sister suffering greatly and saw the empty bottle on her bed. Mrs. Wolfe summoned the ambulance and informed those in charge of the unfortunate occurrence. Detectives Biddercombe, Saunders and Kilpatrick responded and the woman was taken to the hospital for treatment.

The unfortunate woman's husband has been seriously ill in the East St. John hospital for some time. Her sister attributed the act to despondency caused by a fear that she would never be well again.

As Hiram Sees It

"I see," said Mr. Hiram Hornbeam to The Times reporter, "the time has come when one side of the street is again the other side and the neighbors don't speak."

"I had not observed anything of the sort," said the reporter. "You have made a very remarkable assertion. Where is the proof?"

"When I was coming along German street this morning," said Hiram, "I seen a feller come out of his house and 'stun' an' grin at a feller on the other side. The other feller just glared an' went on shovelling snow."

"I don't see any evidence of warfare in that," said the reporter.

"You don't—hey?" said Hiram. "Well, the feller with the shovel was shovelling the other feller's snow. The wind had blowed it all over on his sidewalk—an' I'll bet a big apple that when he seen that other feller grin he said things to himself that you wouldn't dast print in your paper—no, sir."
