The more adventurous travel as far as Vienna, where the daily Swiss pilgrimage becomes in the course of a year a princely income of 2,200,000 crowns. Thus, even allowing for railroad fares, the Swiss unemployed can live in expenditures with the very wealthy of the former Hapsburg capital.

Paris, Dec. 8.—Unemployed workers of Switzerland, of whom, owing to the serious Swiss trade and financial crisis due to the state of anarchy in the exchange markets, there are now many thousands, with their number increasing daily, have discovered an ingenious way of living luxuriously without it costing them more than their unemployment dole. The unemployment pay in Switzerland is six francs and fifty centime a day—barely enough for subsistence. It is paid fortnightly, and as soon as it is drawn the recipient of it crosses the frontier into Germany, where the daily sum he has received from the Swiss government is worth 800 marks, enough to enable him to settle down in a comfortable German hotel until it is time to get his next instalment, which it is necessary to do in person.
