customed to send our cheese to the consideration of an anxious public. United States, the Americans are likely to abrogate the agreement suddenly, as for example, on the eve of an American election, and so dislocate the trade after it had become established. But Mr.
Powell and other Conservative speakers have been telling the public here that after we once enter into this agreen with the United States we shall not be able to get rid of it, even if it proves unsatisfactory. Mr. Powell knows, of course that the agreement can be abrogated at vote of the people's representatives, either at Ottawa, or at Washington. A Conser-vative majority in Parliament—if there should happen to be such a majority within the next twenty or twenty-five years—could abrogate the agreement at a moment's notice. - Similarly, the Liberal party when it returns to power next month could, if it wished to do so, terminate the agreement then, or six months or a year later, if it were found desirable to pursue that course. It is not a treaty such as Sir John Macdonald wanted, or such as Mr. Hazen advocated. Mr. Powell is talking nonsense, unworthy of a ma of his education and intelligence, but quite characteristic of his reckless and insincere style of campaigning. ## KIPLING VS. KIPLING

Rudyard Kipling, according to the Montreal Star, has sent a message to the Canadian people warning them against reciprocity. Now the Star tries to use Mr. Kipling's letter to show that the Liberals are disloyal. But the Liberals introduced the British preference in 1897, in the face of Conservative opposition. That was so striking a movement toward Imperial unity that Mr. Kipling burst into song Well, the British preference is still the corner-stone of the Liberal tariff policy. Hence the logical thing to do is to answer the Kipling of 1911 with the Kipling of
