MAY.—There yet lingers in the minds of many farmers an idea that the moon exerts some influence on crops, causing them to grow better if the seed be sown when the moon is increasing instead of decreasing. A correspondent of the Canada Farmer some time ago asked the Editor to give his opinion on the subject, and he answered thus; it is stated by medical authorities that persons whose minds have become morbidly unsound, are at certain times, appreciably affected by lunar influences—hence the term lunatic. This fact may probably explain the strange delusion under which many farmers labour in regard to sowing certain kinds of grain, especially peas. Science and common sense agree in saying to the farmer—Sow your seed in the regular season when your soil is in proper condition, and never mind the moon.
