The Poison Eaters.

INSIDIOUS DRUGS THAT WAR STRAIN MADE POPULAR.

Since the war ended it is hardly possible to pick up a newspaper without finding some reference to the drug habit.

Cocaine and morphia are the stimulants of which one hears most, and are no doubt used because their effects are so rapid and so powerful.

But there are only two out of a score or more of the poisons which many people have got into the habit of taking. There are women who would shiver at the idea of taking morphia, yet who dose themselves daily with eau de cologne. Five or six drops on a lump of sugar have a most stimulating effect, but from six drops the victim is soon taking a dozen, and goes on to a teaspoonful.

The result is absolute ruin to the digestion and complete sleeplessness, Melancholia follows.

Spirits of lavender are often taken in similar fashion, and the effects are equally destructive.

Chemists can all you victims to the ginger habit. Essence of ginger taken for stomach ache or heartburn becomes a habit and, in the end, poison.

Essence of capsicum is an excellent remedy for that chilly feeling, but like ginger, is apt to become a passion. Excess in this direction wrecks the constitution.

We have all heard of arsenic eating, but though little has been said about it lately, the practice continues. Half a grain to a grain is a dose. The arsenic fiend gets a pretty complexion and becomes plump and rosy, but is liable to very sudden death.

A Mighty Precedent.

(From the Boston Herald.)

The dominion of civilization will be strengthened by the putting of the former German Emperor on trial as the person chiefly responsible for the making of the great war. Courage to respond to the clear demand of justice in a manner never before attempted is shown by the allied and associated nations in their momentous decision. They create a mighty precedent. Peoples have tried their rulers and often removed them without trial for offences committed within their respective realms, but nations have had no judicial means of redress or punishment when rulers of foreign nations made war against them. There was nothing for it but to wait and prepare and then, if possible, resort to war. If wrong had been done. Looked at calmly and critically, with minds freed from the spell of custom, is not the old system vicious, declining, nothing except by force, and never carrying even with its final decision the certainty of justice? A step away from war as the arbiter cannot but be a step toward something better. National justice, as has been indicated, is sometimes truly administered when peoples are wronged by their rulers; but here is an order new and greater, this advance to the administration of international justice. It is the denial and destruction of the tenet of tyranny that might is right. We are not thinking so much of the punishment of William Hohenzollern as of the principle and plan which call him to account for the heinous moral offence of plunging the world into war. Let him have what he justly deserves, neither more or less, and let it and his career as a leader of men; but the great thing to consider is that after that, and after him, we shall have a judicial system with an international tribunal competent to summon to its bar and subject to punishment any ruler who wantonly rushes his nation in arms against another. Surely the Hohenzollern trial will be a dread deterrent, a powerful prevention of war. It cannot be disregarded. For the inter-allied court represents the will of a world organization for the protection of the weak and the preservation of peace. The world does move.

Airplanes for Fire Patrol of the Forests.

After some preliminary reports concerning the possibility of using airplanes as an auxiliary in the work of protecting forests from fire, it is now definitely announced by the U. S. Forest Service that the Air Service and the Forest Service will co-operate in work of this character during the coming summer in portions of the national forests of California, Arizona, New Mexico and other states. Army airmen and crews will be used for the undertaking, which will be largely experimental during the coming season. Besides supplementing the work of the forest rangers in locating forest fires, attempts will be made to utilize aircraft in connection with fire-fighting. One plan to be tried is the use of bombs filled with suitable chemicals as a means of extinguishing fires from the air. It is also suggested that fire-fighters may be carried to the vicinity of fires in dirigibles, and lowered to the ground by means of ladders. Airplanes will use wireless in reporting the location of fires.
