Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

HARD FOR BOTH GUEST AND HOST.

RUTH CAMERON

There are few people for whom I have as great a sympathy as for the mother who goes visiting with her small children.

But among those few are the people who have a mother with small children visiting them.

For it seems to me this is one of those social relations which, while they are inevitable, are a strain on both parties without either party being really to blame.

Children Really As Foreign As Fiji Islanders.

Children are a race by themselves with almost as different needs, desires, pleasures and points of view from those of grown-ups as if they came from the Fiji Islands instead of springing up in the midst of us. In their own homes, more or less provision is made for this peculiar race. But put them in a strange home, especially where there are no children, and conflict and confusion are inevitable.

My neighbor, a middle-aged woman, has had her niece and two children visiting her.

Both are my friends, and as a result I have had both sides of the case poured out to me.

Says the Aunt:

They Are So Hard on the Furniture.

"They go rushing around the house taking hold of everything and prying into everything."

"They get into one piece of mischief after another."

"They are always taking hold of the furniture with greasy hands."

"They don't mind."

Says the Niece:

"At home they have their toys and their own room. Here they have only a toy or two and no special room of their own. And they are so active and eager that they simply go round the house, looking at everything."

"And of course they keep doing things that bother grown-ups because its a grown-up house and not planned for children.

"I'm supposed to be here for a rest, but all the time I am afraid they will scratch the furniture or do something like that that I'm more tired than I am at home."

People Interfere With Her Discipline.

"I know Auntie thinks they don't mind, but one reason is that everything is new and upsetting here and that makes them harder to control, and another is that everyone interferes with my discipline. I say 'don't do that,' and Auntie says 'oh, that won't do any harm, let them,' or else Auntie and Uncle and the rest correct them themselves and you know that gets a child all mixed up. Imagine an animal with half a dozen trainers."

One sympathizes with the Aunt and one sympathizes with the Niece.

And one sympathizes with the desire each has to see the other and the natural instinct to gratify it by a visit. One could hardly suggest that mothers should never visit until children are grown up.

In short this seems, as I said at first, to be one of those inevitable situations which cannot be avoided and can only be kept from being unhappy if each will show charity for the other and try to hold the thought that things cannot be perfect, and that one is going to make the best of them and not have a heart full of unpleasant memories when the visit is over.

True-Domestic Economy.

Do YOU take a pride in your kitchen equipment? or are you still satisfied in grub along with your old coal range, with its attendant smoke, ashes, and dirt and inefficiency?

Do you realise the saving in time and consequent leisure to be secured by an "ALL-GAS-KITCHEN" Don't be behind the times, equip your kitchen with modern Gas appliances, and thus eliminate all the drudgery and dirt of old-time methods. Phone 87, or call at our Showroom for full particulars.

"A Fair Cop."

It is perhaps a testimonial to the high standard of morality in journalism that only once during a professional career of nearly twenty years have I been arrested as a pickpocket. It happened in this wise:—

In Manchester, it is the custom every Whit Sunday for the Catholics to indulge in a monster Sunday-school procession. In point of size there is nothing like it in the country, as readers in the North may know. But that fact was unknown to me, a reporter just arrived from the South of England and attached to the Daily—in Manchester.

On this particular Whit Sunday I had been out of the city on a crime story and it was necessary that I should hasten back to the office and hand in my copy by three o'clock in order to be free to attend another engagement at five. Just before three, I arrived at the corner of Market St., where I had to cross to get to my office, which was situated in a thoroughfare on the other side only a few minutes away. But there, to my amazement, I found the street blocked by a vast horde of spectators. A gay procession with bands and banners was wending its way slowly along.

I was in a hurry, and I looked for an avenue of escape, but in vain. I found on enquiry that in order to get round the route of the procession I should have to make a detour of nearly two miles. I asked a bystander how long it would take for the procession to pass. "At least two hours," he replied.

It was such a simple situation, but I was powerless. It seemed incredible that modern journalism, with all its wonderful resources, offered no means of overcoming such a dilemma.

My hopes rose when a worried-looking policeman came and stood near me. I told him the situation and asked him if he couldn't break through the ranks and get me across. "Impossible," he said. "I can't do it. I'm just off duty and I want to get across myself, but I shall have to wait. I could only break through if I had a charge. Now, if you was a pickpocket, say—"

The words were no sooner uttered than I had a bright idea. "Well," I said, "I'll be a pickpocket."

He was a smart constable. He grasped the idea at once—also my collar with a grip of iron.

"Come along," he said, loudly, so that all around saw his capture. I've gotcher; try to pick pockets, would you?

It caused a great stir in the crowd.

I was glad when my captor hustled me through the ranks of spectators and the procession and got me to the other side of the road in record time.

The next morning two stories from my pen appeared in the paper—the crime story, and the account of how I was forced to become a criminal for strictly business reasons.

Fads and Fashions.

The favorite hat seems to be black. The new picture hats are enormous. Lace appears on the new millinery. More fullness is allowed in skirts. A great many black dresses are worn.

Sports hats are made in turban style.

If a wrap is used, it is frequently a cape.

Brown is the favored color for Fall suits.

Goats' hair is one of the new hat trimmings.

A novel apron forms a workbag when worn.

White and colored neckwear are both favored.

Tailored dresses are the height of simplicity.

USELESS NOISE.

WILL MARSH

The prices still are soaring, but noise won't bring them down; not all our frenzied roaring will cheapen things in town. So let us get together, renouncing tactics vain, and ask neighbors whether we can't do something sane.

The pieces have been speeded until our hearts are sore; and sanity is needed more now than e'er before. We must be sane and thoughtful if we would lay, it's clear, our vengeful hands and swatful upon the profiteer. No vain and rapid ranting, no anarchistic wheeze, will bring the robbers panting upon their stalled knees. We must be calm and sober, an earnest, quiet troop, or long before October we'll all be in the soup. While we remain excited the profiteers will say, "These delegates be-nighted are easy marks to flay. While they are raising thunder, and standing things on end, we have a chance to plunder that quiet wouldn't lend." The pirates profiteering will hear their passing knell, when we are done careering and raising merry Halifax. So let us go together, and cease our riots vain, and ask our neighbors whether we can't do something sane.
