To a Crushed Vollet.

Timid Voilet, sadly shrinking
From the help that I cssay,
Fain would I with freshest deware
All your weariness allay—
Yet I give you what I may.
Must you always droop your eyelic
Oer the love-light fresawed dee;
Nay-around you spread les had.
Hiding eyes umused to weep.
Hiding eyes umused to weep,
fet your presence is so fragrant,
Making all my chamber sweet,
have not the heart to murmur
That my glance you will not mee
Earnestly though I entreat.
sending thus and shedding perfun

Earnestly though I entreat.

Bending thus and shedding perfume
Is so sad, here seems to be n your form but mustles echoMusic from all gladness free, iving but for charity—
titll I wish above your sadness.
Of a song to drown its mona—is of tender love in waiting;—
Will not love, deep love atom
For the last joy you have known es, I think my love has saved you:
Lifted, durling, is your head i ight from gracious depth is welling
Now at last my hope is fed,
Beauty unto fragrance wed.
ow, but no, I'll hold the measure,

WHICH INDICATES CHANGES, INTRODUCES

NEW SCENES.

This was the paragraph which the slip contained:—

"Protuble Exhibition.—There is now being exhibited in the galleries of Mesars Haldane & Sone, in this city, a large oil painting by that promising young artist. Kenneth Bruce. The picture is a magnificent one, being a wide and extensive view on the West Coast, embracing in the foreground the scene of the late melancholy wreck of the Eglantine, and in the distance the Ayrshire hills, the Cumbraes, Arran, and the Ayrshire coast line. It would be noticed in the account we quoted from our Glasgow contemporary that Mr. Bruce and his wife chanced to be on the spot when the wreck took place, and rendered signal assistance in the recovering of the bodies and the saving of one or two survivors. He had been in that character all the summer, engaged in painting the picture now on view, and the wreck taking place on the very rock which he had introduced into his foreground, he seized the opportunity of depicting it as it actually appeared before him on the morning after the sad occurrence. The result has therefore been to give graphic effect and realistic power to a painting which in itself has many qualities of high excellence, giving promise, if we mistake not, of future fame to be won by the talented young artist. The picture is attracting crowds of visitors, and as we understand it is to be on view for a few days longer, we advise our readers not to lose the opportunity of seeing it."

By a simultaneous impulse the eyes of the three turned in silent wonder to the picture which hung upon the wall. It was obvious to them that it was the painting referred to in the paragraph, and the unspoken questions rising in the mind of each were—

"How should the picture have come into their father's possession, and why did he so solemnly enjoin them not to part with it till after the opening of the packet?"

Harry, with a face of troubled emotion, rose and stood before the picture for packet?"

Harry, with a face of troubled emotion, rose and stood before the picture for many moments in silent contemplation.
"And that was painted by Kenneth, Bruce," he murmured.
"Who is he?" asked George, "I never heard of an artist of that name. Is he dead?"

heard of an artist of that name. Is he dead?"

"I faney so," returned Harry; "I—I have heard his name—long ago."

"Oh, I should like to know what became of the child they saved and adopted," aid Caroline; "if it lived, it, its relations were found?"

"Do you not rather wish to know what farther information the packet has to give us?" asked George. "What we have learned yet but deepens the mystery. The paper I first read tells us that the remaining manuscript will let us understand everything. So we shall now proceed to read it."

"Yes, do, George," said Caroline, with breathless eagerness, and Harry at the same time sat down without speaking a word, though the look on his face indicated that he was far from being the least interested of the three.

George lifted the last paper of the packet, and, as the light was now beginning to fail, he drew his chair to the window, and prepared te unfold the written sheets.

A strange undefinable feeling came over him as he did so. An impression that seized him, and the others likewise, that they were about to receive very impression the property of the property had setzed that, and that they were about to receive very important tidings, though of what precise nature they could not conjecture.

And, oh, with what tremendous effect was this expectation to be fullled! They looked for something strange, but the amazing truth came upon them like the crash of a thunderbolt. What the truth was the succeeding chapter will show.

THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY,—Says the New York Herald of Saturday: There are now at the Gilsey House several Eng-lish gentlemen who are well known in this country from their connection with And it is the Gilsey House several English gentlemen who are well known in this country from their connection with railroad metters. Their names are:

Mr. Richard Potter, President of the Mendian Trunk Feilway Company of Canada; Mr. J. M. Grant, Secretary of the same Corporation, and Mr. James Allport, General Manager of the Midland Ruilway of England. The last-named gentleman is reported to be the shrewdest manager in the United Kingdom, multiple their their in their territing the title, 'Railway K'ng,' than even the celebrated Hudson. This party of capitalists arrived yesterday by the steamship "Russia." They were joined in this city by Mr. C. J. Brydges, the Managing Director of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, who will continue with them during their story on this Continent. Their visit to the New World combines pleasure and business, as it is their intention, during their tour of Canada, after having inspected the condition of the Grand Trunk Railway, to closely observe the necessity for and the practicability of building those railroads that are now so loudly called for by the lately awakened "Kanucks." The organization of a Canadian railway system does not wholly occupy the attention of the visitors, for, as the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada is to be in a manner the organization of a Canadian railway system does not the Northern Pacific Railway, they will apply themselves to find out the prospects of that institution, and it is understood that a conference was had by them with its officers yesterday in this trunch that a conference was had by them with its officers yesterday in this trunch and the practicability of building those railroads that are now so loudly called for by the lately awakened "Kanucks." The organization of a Canadian railway system does not wholly occupy the attention of the Visitors, for, as the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, and the practicability of building those railroads that are now so loudly called for the order of the Canada and the practicability of building those railroad
