Their Importance.

He Returns From Big Gathering of Librarians at the Falls.

Mr. Robert Blackwell, public librar-There were 500 or more librarians there from all parts of the United States and Canada, and a most profitable convention was held. Mr. Blackwell has come back full of ideas, some of which will no doubt be worked out that personally he felt that his going there was of great value to himself. A good deal of the time, of course, was taken up with technical questions, such as cataloguing, while the prices of impression of the convention was that no more profitable department existed than that for the young people. The So favorable have been the results over ladies' departments. For inlarger than the one in this city, the off into general reading room, reference room, and young people's department.

Mr. Blackwell has come back more fully convinced of the fact that the greatest care should be taken to provide the best for the young people. This is one of the educative forces of the present day. With the young people the library is the provided that the provided the present day. is an education: with the older people it is rather a recreation. Hence the necessity of having books that will encourage young people to read more and to read the better books. It means the formation of character, so that really there is no more important department.
