CAUSE OF JESSE SMITH'S DEATH NOT DETERMINED

Skull. Coroner W. B. Fowler was presiding, and with him were Provincial Detective Greer and Chief of Police Vannorman. It was not until 8:26 that Acting Crown Attorney E. N. Lewis, of Goderich, arrived.

The proceedings were at once opened on his arrival and the jury roll called. Dr. Thomas Chisholm, sen., was first called. He had attended Mr. Smith after Colborne street—Between Pail Mail and Piccadilly; new up-to-date 1½-story brick dwelling; 7 rooms and bath; modern plumbing; electric light; lot 40 feet, extending to lane; a beautiful home. Dr. J. H. Bethune was next called. He had been called in about an hour and a had been called in about an hour and a half after the accident. Deceased was suffering from concussion of the brain, due to a fracture of the skull. He did not see him again. At that time witness thought the deceased had fallen, but since hearing the post-mortem examination and seeing the skull, he had reason to change his mind. The nature of the wound behind the ear would indicate that it was not a fall, as it would be improbable to have struck that par-

Dr. Peter Macdonald, M. P., sworn, said he believed the accident could have happened by a person slipping sudden ly. Deceased could have arisen and fallen a second time, falling towards his face, and the rough ice would be sufficient to fracture a skull as thin as that of the deceased. Shown the stick of wood, previously produced, witness thought a blow from that could have caused the injury. Witness could offer no explanation of the abrasions on the

In the day time his custom, he believed, was to keep his money in the safe, taking it home in the evening. Only bills were carried. His keys were found next morning in his coat pocket. Witness had no suspicions who stole the first money. The last time he had no reason whatever to suspect anyone of taking the it was strange that he had not noticed money. Witness had told the constable the next morning that money was missing. From the deceased's habits beforehand he would probably have had money. Tuesday was, perhaps, an attended a funeral that afternoon. The deceased usually banked money when he had about $150, and that day he
