Head Office-Toronto. Future of Sun and Moon.

The alterations now occurring in the The alterations now occurring in the distribution in the solar system have led Professor George Darwin to predict that the moon will ultimately return to the carth, which gave her sudden birth so many ages before, and it may further be prophesied that the planets and their satellites must ultimately yield to the gravitational influence of our dying sun and must return to the bosom of their parent. We must colceive of the solar system of today, then, as gathered into one central mass, closely aggregated around that point which, from the beginning, has constituted its center of this shrunken object? It will be a dark star, a dead sun. There are myriads such in the heavens. Sir Rebert Ball has said that to count all the bright stars that we see and say "these are all there are," would be like counting the red-hot horseshoes in England and saying "this is the total number." This dark to-be will therefore be just such another as millions more. There will be no life upon it. We cannot conceive the terror of its cold, for the nebula has been dissipating energy, in the form of light and heat. distribution in the solar system have led cold, for the nebula has been dissipating energy, in the form of light and heat. Into the chilly depths of inter-sidercal space ever since the first hour of its long seval shrinkage. into the chilly depths of inter-sidereal space ever since the first hour of its longaeval shrinkage.

What is the desting of this dead sunamong whose constituent atoms, remember, will be those in the printer's ink before your eyes and those in the eyes, the shelf of your eyes and those in the eyes in desolation." as Stevenson has it—to be borne onward through infinite space? Nothis shriveled globe, the common tomb of sun and earth and Mars and of the bodies of the great that once breathed thereon, may live again. Give it but the consuming embrace of such another voyage, and in a moment new nebula will suffice to evaporate their substance into another cloud, which will repeat the history of the old. The path of the two dead suns will determine the position of the "principal plane," which will form the ground plan of the new system.—Har-per's Magazine.

sex Beekeepers' Association on Saturday afternoon, Mr. R. H. Smith, of St. Thomas, was in the chair. The reports made regarding the honey harvest of last season all agreed that it was only half as large as usual. This was accounted for by last winter's extreme coldness, which killed many of the and was characterized by cool, wet weather. The samples of last season's honey, which were on hand, proved that it was fully up to the average quality. The scarcity of honey had raised the wholesale prices somewhat. Some excellent papers were read by M. D. Anguish, of Scotsville, on "Marketing of Honey;" Mr. M. Petitt, R. H. Smith, of St. Thomas, on "The Qualities of Honey." Mr. D.
